The distinction taken in equity between a purchase by two advancing equal shares of the purchase-money in their joint names, & a mtge. to them under the same circumstances, the first being considered to create a joint tenancy, & the other a tenancy in common, was disapproved of.

(2) Two sisters being tenants in common of real estates had money arising from the rents standing to their joint account in the bank. recover what he paid, deducting what he has received, though the principle of this ct. is not to give relief to those who will not do equity, yet on a bill by the grantor to have an annuity deed delivered up as void under the statute, he is entitled to that relief without accounting for the consideration paid for the annuity, leaving the annuitant to proceed at law (LORD ELDON, C.).—*DAVIS v. 96. — — — — —] — In a ct. of law we cannot impose any terms on the party suing; if he be entitled to a verdict, the law must take its course; but a ct. of equity will impose on the party applying such terms as they think right & according to conscience (ASHHURST, J.).—*DEEKS v. 97. — — — — —] — Where a judgment would, according to the strict letter of the law, work injustice, & the ct. is called on by the circumstances of the case to use its discretion in doing something; they will not grant it, unless the party having the strict legal right will consent to perform what they think will be fair & equitable between all the parties.—DOE d. ROYLE & GREENWAY v. BONSON (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 46.

98. — — — — —] — It is a fallacy to apply to this case the principle that "he, who comes for equity, must do equity." I conceive the true meaning of that maxim only to be this, that a man, who comes to seek the aid of a ct. of equity to enforce a claim, must be prepared to submit in that suit to any directions which the known principles of a ct. of equity may make it proper to give (LORD DEVON).—*COLVIN v. d. Offer to do equity—When necessary—In application for relief.] — Where a pltf. seeking equity has refused & does not offer to do equity, he may lose his costs, though successful.—SANDER v. TWIGG (1887), 13 V. L. R. 765.—AUS.

will be set aside. The present improved value or permanent benefit to the premises is the measure of remuneration for expenditure.

The leases must be set aside. . . . It is said the whole transaction is founded on fraud, & that there should be no compensation. This ct., however, does not fix a penalty on fraud, but he who will have equity must do it (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—A.-G. v. DAY, A.-G. v. JOHNSON (1844), 3 L. T. O. S. 239.

100. ———.]—I understand the rule to be this, that where parties are coming for simply equitable relief the ct. of equity may say, "We have a discretion whether we will grant or refuse that relief, & therefore, we can grant it upon such terms as we think right to impose, because you are asking equity, & therefore we impose certain terms upon you" (KAY, L.J.).—PORTSEA ISLAND BUILDING SOCIETY v. BARCLAY, [1895] 2 Ch. 298; 64 L. J. Ch. 579; 72 L. T. 744; 11 T. L. R. 424; 39 Sol. Jo. 502; 12 R. 324, C. A.

101. ———.]—The railway co. had exhausted their capital & borrowing powers; but their undertaking was yet incomplete. At a general meeting of the co., a balance-sheet showing the then amount of excess, was laid before the co., & a resolution was adopted authorising the board to issue to L., their financial agent, bonds to be settled by counsel. Lloyds' bonds to a large amount were accordingly given to L., upon which he raised money, some part of which, it was not disputed, was applied in payment of the co.'s debts, & completing their works, & the bonds passed from L. into the hands of the present resps., who carried in claims against the proceeds of sale of the railway under a special Act of Parliament for its dissolution, & claimed to be entitled to a surplus of such proceeds in priority to the shareholders. On appeal by the shareholders:—Held: although it was not law that no creditor who trusted the co. after its capital and borrowing powers were exhausted could recover what was due to him, yet any debenture, loan notes, or the like, for the mere borrowing of money in excess of the co.'s powers, were void; but as the moneys raised in this case had been applied in paying debts of the co., & otherwise for the purposes of its undertakings, with the sanction & acquiescence of the shareholders, these latter could not be entitled to the surplus of the co.'s property without repaying all moneys so raised & expended.

There is no ground whatever for asserting that a contract or instrument which fails at law for illegality, can be enforced in equity, even although money has been paid & received in respect of it. Where a pltf. seeks to set aside an illegal contract, equitable terms are imposed on him by this ct., as the price of the relief; but as to any claim sought to be actively enforced, the defence of illegality is as available in equity as at law (GIFFARD, L.J.).—*RE CORK & YOUGHAL RY. 102. No imposition of arbitrary terms—Equality as plaintiff or defendant.—The argument in this case was founded upon the well-established rule of this ct., that pltf. who would have equity must do equity—a rule by which, properly understood, it is at all times satisfactory to me to be bound. The rule cannot per se decide what terms the ct. should impose upon pltf. as the price of the decree it gives him. It decides in the abstract, that the ct., giving pltf. the relief to which he is entitled, will do so only upon the terms of his submitting to give deft. such corresponding rights (if any) as he also may be entitled to in respect of the subject-matter of the suit;—what these rights are must be determined aliunde by strict rules of law, & not by any arbitrary determination of the ct. The rule, in short, merely raises the question what those terms, if any, should be. If, for example, pltf. seeks an account against deft., the ct. will require pltf. to do equity by submitting himself to account in the same matter in which he asks an account; the reason of which is, that the ct. does not take accounts partially, & perhaps ineffectually, but requires that the whole subject be, once for all, settled between the parties. It is only, I may observe as a general rule, to the one matter which is the subject of a given suit that the rule applies, & not to distinct matters pending between the same parties. So, in the case of a bill for specific performance, the ct. will give the purchaser his conveyance, provided he will fulfill his part of the contract by paying the purchase-money; & e converso, if the vendor were pltf., the ct. will assist him, only upon condition of his doing equity by conveying to the purchaser the subject of the contract upon receiving the purchase-money. In this, as in the former case, the ct. will execute the matter which is the subject of the suit wholly, & not partially. So, if a bill be filed by the obligor in an usurious bond, to be relieved against it, the ct., in a proper case, will cancel the bond, but only upon terms of the obligor refunding to the obligee the money actually advanced. The reasoning is analogous to that in the previous cases. The equity of the obligor is to have the entire transaction rescinded. The ct. will do this, so as to remit both parties to their original positions: it will not relieve the obligor from his liability, leaving him in possession of the fruits of the illegal transaction he complains of. I know of no case which cannot be explained upon this or analogous reasoning; & my opinion is, that the ct. can never lawfully impose merely arbitrary conditions upon pltf., only because he stands in that position upon the record, but can only require him to give deft. that which by the law of the ct., independently of the mere position of the party on the record, is the right of deft. in respect of the subject of the suit. A party, in short, does not by becoming pltf. in equity give up any of his rights, or submit those rights to the arbitrary disposition of the ct.: He submits only to give deft. his rights in respect of the subject-matter of the suit, on condition of pltf. obtaining his own. As a general proposition, it may be correctly stated, that pltf. will never, in that character, be compelled to give deft. anything but what deft.

might, as pltf., enforce, provided a cause of suit arose (SIR JAMES WIGRAM, V.-C.).—HANSON v. KEATING (1844), 4 Hare, 1; 14 L. J. Ch. 13; 8 Jur. 949; 67 E. R. 537.

103. Offer to do equity—Whether necessary—In application for relief.]—Pltfs. being in negotiation with the vendors, which afterwards resulted in a contract for purchase of an estate, applied to B. for an advance to enable them to pay the deposit, & a verbal agreement was entered into, by which B. was to be substituted as the purchaser of the estate, paying to *pltf.*s. £2,000, & securing to them certain other advantages; & in order to enable B. to have his name substituted for those of *pltf.*s. as purchaser, *pltf.*s. signed a memorandum simply transferring to him the benefit of the contract entered into with the vendors in consideration of the £2,000. B. having paid a large sum under the agreement afterwards refused to perform any more of the verbal agreement than was comprised in the written memorandum, & *pltf.*s. filed a bill to set aside the memorandum & to restrain the dealing with the estate on the footing of it, but did not offer to repay the advances:—Held: the bill was not demurrable, because it did not contain such offer. The prayer for general relief contained in a bill implies that pltf. desires that everything may be done which is necessary for the purpose of the relief which he expressly prays.

Upon principle there appears to be no good reason why a pltf. in equity, suing upon equitable grounds, should be required to offer on the face of his bill, to submit to those terms which the ct. at the hearing may think it right to impose as the price of any relief to which he may be entitled (SELBORNE, C.).—JERVIS v. BERRIDGE (1873), 8 Ch. App. 351; 42 L. J. Ch. 518; 28 L. T. 481; 21 W. R. 395, L. C. & L. JJ.

The rule that a party coming for equity does not extend so far as to affect matters unconnected with the transaction in respect of which the relief is sought.—WILKINSON v. The rule certainly does not go so far as to entitle the ct. arbitrarily to impose terms upon a pltf., who may be driven to ask for its assistance. It is restricted in its operation, & the true meaning of it, as I apprehend, is this, that those who ask for the assistance of the ct. must do justice as to the matters in respect of which that assistance is asked (TURNER, L.J.).—GIBSON v. #### PART II. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 2.

a. Borrowing money to pursue litigation.]—The borrowing of money to pursue litigation, the object of which is to obtain a possible benefit, cannot be justified under the doctrine of legal necessity, though possibly if the litigation resulted in benefit to the estate, the debt would be binding in accordance with the principle of equity embodied in the maxim, "He who enjoys the benefit ought to bear the burden also."—BHAGWAN DAS NAIR v. MAHADEO PRASAD PAL (1923), 1 L. R. 45 All. 390.—IND.

i. Repayment of money expended on another's estate.]—Action to set aside a tax sale of certain lands to debt. made in 1901. Debt. counterclaimed for improvements.—Held: even if debt.'s improvements did not come within the statute as to improvements under mistake of title, yet, as a matter of equity, before they would grant pltf. the relief sought by him, they would compel him to do equity by paying for the outlays made by debt. on the property.—RICHARDS v. COLLINS (1912), 23 O. W. R. 499; 4 O. W. N. 375; 27 O. L. R. 390; 9 D. L. R. 249.—CAN.

g. Advances.]—Pltf.*, having no title, assigned the land in question first to C. & afterwards to M., to secure certain advances. The Crown having issued the patent to C., pltf. sought to get in the legal estate outstanding in C., but without paying M.:—Held: under the maxim, "He that comes into equity must do equity," he was first bound to pay the advances made by M.—WIGGINS v. MEDDRUM (1866), 15 Gr. 377.—CAN.

h. Agreement.—By corporation not under seal.—Right of corporation to repudiate.]—Cts. of equity do not allow corps. to use their incompetency to act without seal to obtain the advantages of incomplete bargains, & then repudiate them in a manner which would operate as fraud.—CONNOLLY compensation, & to give a receipt in full for all moneys that might be claimed by him by way of damage; afterwards, that discovering the fraud, he had brought an action for damages, to which the co. pleaded the receipt, & prayed that the receipt might stand only for the amount paid, & not as a satisfaction for all demands; & that debts. might be restrained from relying on their plea:—Held: (1) pltf. was not barred by C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 85, from coming into equity; & (2) the bill was rightly framed in being limited to the amount of relief above mentioned.—STEWART v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1865), 2 De G. 115. Relief against usurious contract—Tender of money advanced.]—Before a party can entitle himself by a civil action to relief from an usurious contract, he must tender all the money really advanced.

This is an equitable action brought by pltf. in order to be relieved from an usurious contract. She must come therefore with clean hands, according to the principle that those who seek equity must do equity (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.)—

117. Attempt to establish revocation of will—After deriving benefit thereunder—Amount received to be paid into court.]—S., purporting to be a spinster, in 1797 made a will, & died in 1817. After full inquiry as to any further will probate was granted in common form to B. the surviving exor., & he acting at the instance of the mother the sole next of kin of testatrix administered the estate for seven years & paid all legatees except one who was a minor. In 1824 the residuary legatee & administrator with the will annexed of the mother cited the exor. to bring in the probate & to show cause why it should not be revoked on the ground that S. was not a spinster but had in fact been married in Austria to F.:—Held: the administrator of the mother could not be in a better position than she would have been in & therefore he could not put in suit the validity of the will without bringing into ct. the amount which she had received under the will: even if this were done he would be barred, as she would have been barred by her acquiescence in & consent to the administration of the estate by the exor.—BRAHAM v. BURCHELL (1826), 3 Add. 243; 162 E. R. 468.

118 Property claimed by husband in right of wife—Wife's equity to settlement.]—C. being entitled in right of his wife to certain estates for the life of his wife, subject to terms of years created for raising portions which were outstanding, the assignee of the husband filed his bill, to be declared entitled to the estates, subject to the prior charges during the joint lives of the husband & wife, & for a receiver. The wife set up an equity for maintenance out of the estates, which was allowed upon appeal.

There are many cases in which this ct. will not interfere with the right which the possession of a legal estate gives, though the effect will be directly opposed to its own principles as administered between parties having purely equitable interests, such as in cases of joint incumbrances without notice, giving the preference to the prior incumbrance, by procuring the legal title (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).

The equity which the ct. administers in securing a provision of maintenance for the wife, is founded on the well known rule of compelling a party who seeks equity to do equity (LORD COTTENHAM, C.)—STURGIS v. CHAMPNEYS (1839), 5 My. & Cr. 97; 9 L. J. Ch. 10; 3 Jur. 1096; 41 E. R. 308, L. C.

123. — Distinction between total & partial failure.—[—]The maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity, when applied to a case of partial non-performance of an agreement, includes the rule at law which, in actions for damages upon contracts, discriminates between a whole or only a partial failure of performance; the breach being a bar when it goes to the whole, but no bar to a partial failure.

The maxim as their Lordships understand it includes the rule at law which in all suits upon contracts, either for specific performance or for damages, guides to discriminate whether an alleged breach of the duty of pltf. under the contract is a bar to the suit (per Cur.).—OXFORD v. 125. Policy of insurance—Claim by joint holder for premiums advanced.—[—]Pltf. & her husband effected in their joint names a policy of assurance on their joint lives to be payable upon the death of whichever of them should first die. They had previously agreed that each should pay one half of the annual premiums, & in some years the premiums were so paid, but the husband from time to time, became unable to pay his moiety & then pltf. at his request paid it for him out of her own moneys. They both concurred in creating charges upon the policy, & subsequently the husband executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors, assigning all his property, but not specifically mentioning the policy, to deft. as trustee. No notice of this deed was given to the insurance co. At the time of the husband's death the aggregate of the premiums paid by pltf. on his behalf exceeded in amount one moiety of the balance of the policy moneys remaining after payment of the joint charges:—Held: pltf. being the legal owner of the policy deft. whose only claim was in equity must do equity; & pltf. was entitled to set off her claim against her husband for the portion of the premiums paid on the policy by her at his request.—Re MCKERRELL, MCKERRELL v. GOWANS, [1912] 2 Ch. 648; 82 L. J. Ch. 22; 107 L. T. 404; 6 B. W. C. C. N. 153.

126. Fraud on bank by trustee—Obligation on co-trustee to give notice to bank.—[—]Certain stock was standing in the books of the Bank of England in the joint names of H. & P. (trustees for S.). P. by means of a forged power of attorney from H., sold out the whole amount of stock, but continued to account to S. for the dividends. Some time elapsed before it was discovered by H. & S. that the stock no longer stood in the joint names of H. & P. but that, under the forged power of attorney, P. had sold out the whole amount. No notice was given to the Bank of the forgery until the fifth day from its discovery; & on that day P. escaped from the country. A bill was filed against the governors co. of the Bank by S. & H. for the pur-whom the sheriff had conveyed them, although she had paid only a portion of the amount bid for her by deft. as her agent. Pltf. filed a bill seeking to redeem on payment of the amount paid on account of the first sale & interest merely, less rents received:—Held: the payment made by deft. having ensured to the benefit of pltf., deft. was entitled to be repaid the amount, although paid for an improper purpose; & pltf. having sought to deprive deft. of this money on purely technical grounds, the ct., on overruling his objections to the claim, did so with costs.—TAYLOR v. BROWN (1877), 25 Gr. 53.—CAN.

o. Redemption.—[—]It is only in an action for redemption, or one in which the question of the number of years' arrears of interest to be allowed is to be treated as if the action were one for redemption, that more than six years' arrears are allowed on the principle that he who comes into equity must do equity.—BRITISH CANADIAN LOAN & AGENCY CO. v. FARNER (1905), 15 Man. L. R. 593; 24 C. L. T. 273.—CAN.

pose of compelling them to replace the stock which had been so sold out, together with the accruing dividend. This defts. refused to do, on the ground that due notice had not been given by H. & S. of the forgery; & that if pltf. had any right at all, it was by an action at law:—Held: (1) the proper remedy was in equity, the Bank of England being the public book-keepers of the stockholders; (2) the moment the stock was improperly sold out the right to have it replaced or reinstated arose; but without destroying the principle of the obligation which devolved on the parties seeking equity to do equity, by making known to the Bank the forgery as soon as it arose.—SLOMAN v. BANK OF ENGLAND (1845), 14 Sim. 475; 14 L. J. Ch. 226; 5 L. T. O. S. 326; 9 Jur. 243; 60 E. R. 442.

The plate was afterwards deposited by the husband with deft. as security for a loan, the deposit being made with the knowledge & consent of pltf. In an action to recover possession of the plate:—Held: inasmuch as the wife had parted with the possession of the plate & had the benefit herself & it was received bond fide, she could not recover possession without repaying the advance.—*VAUGHAN v. 130 v. — — ——A ct. of equity will not assist a party who has, whilst another was intoxicated, obtained a deed from him.

If there was any unfair advantage taken of a party's situation, or any contrivance or management to draw him into drink, he might be a proper object of relief in equity.—NAGLE v. BAYLOR (1842), 3 Dr. & War. 60.—IR.

a. — No relief to parties to illegal transactions.—Cts. will not assist parties to illegal transactions, except in certain cases; & semble, not even then, where property has been conveyed & it is sought to obtain an order for its reconveyance upon the ground that such conveyance originated in an illegal dealing.—MCCAHILL v. HENTY (1878), 4 V. R. (Eq.) 68.—AUS.

t. — — ——Cts. of justice will not interpose actively in favour of a pltf. who is particeps criminis in an illegal agreement.—FIELD v. BENNETT, BENNETT v. FIELD, [1907] St. R. Qd. 187.—AUS.

133. — Wrong done by defendant.]—Before the Jud. Acts a suit for an account could be maintained in equity in the following cases: (1) Where pltf. had a legal right to have money payable to him ascertained & paid, but which right, owing to defective legal machinery, he could not practically enforce at law. Suits for an account between principal & agent, & between partners, are familiar instances of this class of case. (2) Where pltf. would have had a legal right to have money ascertained & paid to him by deft., if deft. had not wrongfully prevented such right from accruing to pltf. In such a case a ct. of law could only give unliquidated damages for deft.'s wrongful act; & there was often no machinery for satisfactorily ascertaining what would have been due & payable if deft. had acted properly. In such a case, however, a ct. of equity decreed an account, ascertained what would have been payable if deft. had acted as he ought to have done & ordered him to pay the amount. (3) Where pltf. had no legal but only equitable rights against deft., & where an account was necessary to give effect to those equitable rights. Ordinary suits by cestuis que trust against their trustees & suits for equitable waste fell within this class. (4) Combination of the above cases (LINDLEY, L.J.).

(5) The principle is, that a person is not allowed to derive any advantage from his own wrongdoing, & that, in order to prevent this, a ct. of equity will treat him as having done that which he ought to have done. In such a case as is now being considered the first thing to ascertain is what would have been payable under the agreement if defts. had not wrongfully prevented anything from becoming due. The sum thus ascertained will be treated as a debt in equity, although it is not a debt at law (LINDLEY, L.J.).—LONDON, CHATHAM & DOVER RY. CO. v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. CO., [1892] 1 Ch. 120; 61 L. J. Deft. by answer said they were entered into for money lent & debts due. It appeared by proof, that deft. was a common harlot, & that pltf.'s father had unlawful conversation with her:—Held: (1) though this was not set forth in the bill, yet deft.'s answer, saying the bonds were given for money lent, sufficiently put it in issue, though not laid in the bill.

She signed this paper for the purpose of enabling him to borrow money on her reversionary interest ; he threatening that if she did not sign it he would send her back to her relations, with whom she was on bad terms. The husband sold her reversionary interest, & shortly before completion, he being at the time in prison for debt, she signed & gave to purchaser's solr. a letter addressed to one of the trustees of the fund, stating that she had before her marriage assigned her interest in the trust fund to her husband. Pltf. entered into contracts with the other quarry owners to purchase the proportion of stone agreed upon from each. Notwithstanding the agreement, defts., some of the quarry owners, sent in a tender, which was accepted by the corpn. Pltf. then filed a bill for an injunction to restrain defts. from supplying the stone during the year 1875. Defts. demurred :—Held : the corpn. were not necessary parties, & the agreement was not void either as against public policy, or for want of equity.

158. — Depending on contract—Not volunteer.—The maxim that equity looks upon that as done which ought to be done applies only in cases depending on contract in favour of persons who are entitled to enforce the contract, & cannot be invoked by volunteers.

Equity, no doubt, looks on that as done which ought to be done; but this rule, although usually expressed in general terms, is by no means universally true. Where the obligation to do what ought to be done is not an absolute duty, but only an obligation arising from contract, that which ought to be done is only treated as done in favour of some person entitled to enforce the contract as against the person liable to perform it (LINDLEY, L.J.).—*Re ANSTIS, CHETWYND v. b. Construction of maxim.—This ct. looks upon the equitable right as if it were the estate; & if the person who has the legal title thinks proper to desert his duty, & abandon the party whom it was his business to protect, this ct. will not only compel him to perform his duty, but in the meantime will give to the cestui que trust all the benefit he would have regularly

159. — Contract for transfer of property.—For valuable consideration.—After acquired property.—(1) At law non-existing property to be acquired at a future time is not assignable; in equity it is so. At law, although a power is given in a deed of assignment to take possession of after-acquired property, no interest is transferred, even as between the parties themselves, unless possession is actually taken; in equity, the moment the property comes into existence, the agreement operates upon it.

(2) In equity it is not necessary for the alienation of existing property that there should be a formal deed of conveyance. A contract to transfer the property, given for valuable consideration, provided it is capable of being the subject of a decree for specific performance, passes it at once, & the vendor becomes a trustee for the vendee. This rule applies to personal property, as well as to real estate. Such a contract, if made with respect of the sale or mtge. of future acquired property, being capable of specific performance, transfers the beneficial interest in the property, as soon as it is acquired, to the vendee or mtgee., who may have an injunction to restrain its removal.

(3) T. was the owner of certain machinery in a mill; it was purchased by H., but not removed, & T. continued in possession. T. executed a deed, which was duly registered, by which it was declared that the machinery was the property of H., that T. desired to repurchase it for £5000, but had not the money to pay for it, wherefore it was conveyed to B. in trust when T. should pay the money to transfer it to him, & if he did not pay the money to hold it absolutely for H. The deed contained a covenant by T. to insure the machinery, & another covenant that all the machinery which, during the continuance of the deed should be placed in the mill in addition to, or substitution for, the original machinery, should be subject to the same trusts. T. sold some of the original machinery, purchased new machinery, & sent to H. accounts of these sales & purchases, but nothing was done by or on behalf of H. to take possession of the newly purchased machinery. On Apr. 2, 1860, H. served T. with notice of a demand for payment of the £5,000. An execution against T. was afterwards put in by a creditor:—Held: though there had been no novus actus interveniens, the title of H. was preferable to that of the execution creditor, as to the new as well as the old machinery.—*HOLROYD v. The assignment was duly registered under the Bills of Sale, 1878 (c. 31). The interest due under the above-mentioned security being in arrear pltf. obtained judgment of recovery of the premises; prior, however, to the writ of possession being delivered to the sheriff, the latter had seized a considerable amount of machinery & fixtures, used in connection with the sugar refinery, but acquired subsequently to the deed, under a writ of fi. fa. issued by defts. upon a judgment obtained against M., who was then in possession of the premises & of the property seized:—Held: as the assignment to pltf., though of after acquired property, was absolute, & not a mere agreement to assign, & as the goods were sufficiently specific to make the assignment operative in equity, pltf. was entitled to retain the property seized as against defts.—*LEATHAM v. He subsequently gave six months' notice to quit, as if on a yearly tenancy, & left the premises. An action was brought in the county ct. for a quarter's rent, accruing due after deft. had given up possession. The value of the premises exceeded £500, so that the judge had no jurisdiction to decree specific performance of the agreement; but he was of opinion that it was a case in which specific performance would be decreed, & that he was, therefore, bound to treat deft. as tenant under the terms of the agreement, & he gave judgment for pltf. On appeal:—Held: the equitable doctrine that a person who enters under an executory agreement for a lease is to be treated as in under the terms of the agreement, can only be applied where the ct. in which the action is brought has concurrent jurisdiction in law & equity, & that pltf. could not recover in the action.—*FOSTER v. Between Mar. 31, 1890, & Mar. 31, 1891, a railway co. gave notice to treat for some leasehold premises on which a part of the partnership business was carried on.

On Apr. 8, 1891, the co. made an offer of £10,000 for the premises. On Apr. 10, one of the partners died, & on Apr. 11 the co.'s offer was accepted. The balance-sheet for Mar. 1891, had not then been signed, it being the usual practice of the partnership not to sign it till a little later than that time, as the accounts generally took some three or four weeks to prepare:—Held: upon the equitable principle that that must be regarded as done which ought to have been done, the balance-sheet for Mar. 1891, must be deemed to have been signed on Mar. 31, & the value of the deceased partner's share ought therefore to be ascertained on the basis of the general account of 1891, & not that of 1890.—*HUNTER v. The deed was in form an absolute assignment. The Duke subsequently mortgaged the house for the purpose of raising money to pay his debts. The Duchess joined with the Duke in covenanting to pay the mtge. debt, but the equity of redemption was reserved to the Duke alone. Upon the death of the Duke in 1892, the Duchess claimed to be entitled to the house subject to the mtge. There was evidence that she had assigned the house to the Duke solely to enable him to mtge. it in his own name, & that it was part of the arrangement between them that he should re-assign to her, which, if he had lived, he would have done:—Held: the case fell within the authorities which forbid above Act to be used to cover what would amount to a fraud, & consequently the statute could not be successfully pleaded in opposition to the claim of the Duchess.—*Re MARLBOROUGH (DUKE), DAVIS v. deeds as apparent owner, allowed, upon the rule, that a ct. of equity gives no assistance against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice.

Averments necessary to a plea for valuable consideration without notice are, that the vendor or mortgagor was the owner or pretended owner, & that he was in possession, not that the purchaser was put in possession.

Is it not worth consideration whether the very principle of this plea is not this: "I have honestly & bond fide paid for this in order to make myself the owner of it, & you shall have no information from me as to the perfection or imperfection of my title, until you deliver me from the peril in which you state I have placed myself in the article of purchasing bond fide" (LORD ELDON, C.).—WALLWYN v. 196. ————J.—(1) There is no such general rule as that a ct. of equity will never assist a pltf. against a deft. who is a purchaser without notice; & an incumbrancer for value of an equitable interest may successfully file a bill against a subsequent incumbrancer for value to have the priority declared & enforced.

(2) Every conveyance of an equitable interest is an innocent conveyance, that is to say, the grant of a person entitled merely in equity passes only that which he is justly entitled to & no more. If, therefore, a person seised of an equitable estate (the legal estate being outstanding), makes an assurance by way of mtge., or grants an annuity, & afterwards conveys the whole estate to a purchaser, he can grant to the purchaser that which he has, viz., the estate subject to the mtge. or annuity, & no more. The subsequent grantee takes only that which is left in the grantor. Hence grantees & incumbrancers claiming in equity take & are ranked according to the dates of their securities; & the maxim applies Qui prior est tempore potior est jure (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

(3) At the hearing an affidavit of M. P. & another person was produced denying the fact of notice of the annuity at the time of the grant & at the time of the creation of the marriage settlement, & the contention at the bar was that the defence of purchase for valuable consideration without notice was available for defts. under these circumstances & ought to be allowed as a bar to the claim by the ct. The Vice-Chancellor in his judgment refused to admit the defence of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, & I entirely agree with him in the conclusion that such a defence requires to be pleaded by the answer, more especially where an answer has been put in (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

(4) There appear to be three cases in which the use of this defence [purchase for valuable consideration] is most familiar:—

First, where an application is made to an auxiliary jurisdiction of the ct. by the possessor of a legal title, as by an heir-at-law or by a tenant for life for the delivery of title deeds & deft. pleads that he is a bond fide purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. In such a case the defence is good, & the reason given is, that as against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice the ct. gives no assistance—that is, no assistance to the legal title. But this rule does not apply where the ct. exercises a legal jurisdiction concurrently with cts. of law. . . .

(5) The second class of cases is the ordinary one of several purchasers or incumbrancers each claiming in equity, & one who is later & last in time succeeds in obtaining an outstanding legal estate not held upon existing trusts or a judgment, or any other legal advantage the possession of which may be a protection to himself or an embarrassment to other claimants. He will not be deprived of this advantage by a ct. of equity. To a bill filed against him for this purpose by a prior purchaser or incumbrancer, deft. may maintain the plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice; for the principle is, that a ct. of equity will not disarm a purchaser—that is, will not take from him the shield of any legal advantage. This is the common doctrine of the tabula in naufragio. (6) Thirdly, where there are circumstances that give rise to an equity as distinguished from an equitable estate,—as for example, an equity to set aside a deed for fraud, or to correct it for mistake,—& the purchaser under the instrument maintains the plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, the ct. will not interfere (LORD WESTBURY, C.).—PHILLIPS v. Defts. demurred:—Held: (1) a ct. of equity had jurisdiction; (2) time did not begin to run against pltf.'s right to sue in equity until the time when he might first, with reasonable diligence, have discovered the fraud; (3) a purchaser for value who, though not having any personal notice of the fraud, contracts through an agent who knows of the fraud, cannot protect himself under the saving Stat. 208. — — — — —]—Defence inferred from pleadings.]—C., trustee with pltf. of a will, & also trustee with debt. of a settlement, having misappropriated a portion of the settlement fund, applied an equal portion of the will fund in the purchase of stock, which he transferred into the names of himself & debt. Pltf. & debt. were both innocent of O.'s fraud, & debt. & the cestuis que trust under the settlement had no notice that the stock was purchased with part of the will fund. O. died insolvent. In an action by pltf. to compel debt. to transfer the stock to him:—Held: debt. having by accepting the transfer of the stock given up his right to sue C. for his debt to the trust, was entitled to be treated as a purchaser for value without notice, & consequently to retain the stock as part of the settlement fund.

When debt. took the transfer of this stock into the name of himself & of C., he, by accepting the transfer, lost & put an end to the right of action which he had as against C. in order to make him bring back this fund & invest it for the purposes of the settlement. Therefore he gave up, by accepting this stock, a valuable right. He gave valuable consideration just as much as if he had actually parted with money; for he gave up, lost, parted with the right to sue C. which, up to the time when this stock was transferred, he had (COTTON, L.J.).

Debt. has got a legal right to this property & why on earth is it to be taken away from him? It can only be taken away from him on the ground of some breach of trust which affects it. No doubt if he had notice, then his legal title would be invalidated. If he was a volunteer, he could not stand in a better position than the person who conveyed to him; but if he is not a volunteer, upon what principle can you take away his property? (BOWEN, L.J.).

A rector, in 1811, demised his rectory to A. for a term of years to secure the due payment of an annuity; in 1814, he, for valuable consideration, demised the tithes of certain lands within the rectory to the occupier B., who, at the time, had no notice of the prior charge. The annuity fell into arrear in 1816; & in 1817, the rector took the benefit of the insolvent act. B., remained in the occupation of lands, & retained the tithes, claiming to be entitled to them under the deed of 1814, & no step was taken to enforce payment till 1827, when A. filed against him a bill for an account, in answer to which, B. insisted that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice:—Held: that defence was of no avail against the legal title of pltf.; & debt. ought to account for the tithes for the six years before the filing of the bill.—COLLINS v. 227. —[—]—Against delivery up of title deeds.]—In 1856 H. & C., who were trustees of a settlement, lent £7,700 on mtge. of freehold lands belonging to S. the mtge. being for three years certain. O. was a solr., & acted in the matter both for the trustees & for S., & took possession of the title deeds on behalf of the trustees, & paid the interest as it became due to the cestui que trust. In 1859, before the three years had expired, S. sold part of the property in mortgage to three purchasers. The mtge. was not disclosed & S. purported to convey the legal estate to the respective purchasers in consideration in the whole of £3,080, C. again acting as solr. to S. Such title deeds as related only to the parts sold were handed to the respective purchasers. Between S. & C. there was a running account, & S. paid to C. the £3,080, C. giving to S. a receipt signed by him on behalf of himself & his co-trustee, H., who he alleged was abroad. H. was in England, but knew nothing of these transactions. In 1870 S. contracted to sell another part of the property in mortgage to P. for £1,500. He declined on this occasion to conceal the mtge., & pressed C. to obtain for him a reconveyance of the parts already sold. C. then informed S. that he had appropriated the £3,080, & lost it. He then represented to H. that S. had sold different parts of the property to purchasers for £3,080 & £1,500, & obtained from H. a conveyance to P. of the part agreed to be sold to him, & a reconveyance to S. of the parts sold for £3,080, in order that S. might convey to the purchasers. The conveyance to P. was then completed with the knowledge of S., & the reconveyance was handed to S. C. was to have paid the whole of the money to a joint account, but he failed to do so, & absconded taking the mortgage deed with him. Before S. had conveyed the legal estate to the purchasers H. filed his bill against C., S. & all the purchasers:—Held: (1) the purchasers were purchasers only of an equity of redemption, & they could not avail themselves of the legal estate, the reconveyance of which had been procured by fraud; (2) H. was entitled to have the reconveyance to S. cancelled, & an account taken of what was due on the mortgage security, & also to a decree that the amount found due should be paid by S.; (3) upon default of payment by S. & on the purchasers, except P., failing to pay such amount, H. was entitled to a foreclosure, except as to the parts sold to P., instead of a sale; (4) the purchasers could not be ordered to deliver up the title deeds in their possession, the rule being that from a purchaser for value without notice the ct. takes nothing away which he has honestly acquired.

228. —[—]—An action of co-ownership was instituted on behalf of W. against a British vessel, & against H., deft. intervening. The statement of claim alleged (inter alia), that by bill of sale duly registered in 1867 deft., as sole owner of the vessel, transferred for valuable consideration a moiety of the same to one T., & that T., by a subsequent bill of sale duly registered in 1876, transferred the moiety of the vessel to pltf. for value. Deft., in his statement of defence, denied that he had at any time signed a bill of sale transferring any shares in the vessel to T., & alleged (inter alia) that if any such bill of sale had been registered, the same was made & registered fraudulently. At the hearing of the action the registration & execution of the bills of sale were proved. The ct. thereupon directed that the question whether the fraud alleged could affect the rights of pltf. should be raised on demurrer. Pltf. thereupon demurred to so much of the statement of defence as alleged fraud:—Held: the demurrer must be sustained on the ground that, the legal ownership in the moiety of the vessel having passed to pltf. for valuable consideration by the execution & registration of a bill of sale without notice of fraud, pltf. had thereby acquired a title to the same as against deft.—THE HORLOCK (1877), 2 P. 234. ————]—In 1878 a widower, who was living with his four daughters, two of whom had recently attained 21 years of age & two were minors, was in embarrassed circumstances. He had mortgaged the life interest to which he was entitled under a certain will, & his affairs having become more involved, bkpcy. proceedings were threatened. The eldest of the daughters, then about 22 years old, became acquainted with the circumstances, & in order to save her father from being adjudicated a bkpt. she was induced to mortgage her reversionary interest under the same will for the purpose of raising some money to pay his debts. She had no independent legal advice in the transaction. The mtge. was prepared by her father's solrs., one of the firm being also one of the mtgees. The mtge. was prepared upon the father's instructions alone before the solrs. had any interview with the daughter. The same solrs. also acted for the mtgees. In 1881 the daughter became of unsound mind, & had ever since remained in that condition.

Upon the direction of the master in lunacy an action was brought on behalf of the daughter against A., the survivor of the mtgees., & her father to set aside the mtge. of her reversionary interest on the ground of undue influence. The father died after the commencement of the action:—Held: (1) the transaction was set in motion by the father & was carried out by his influence over his daughter; (2) A., the mtgee., had notice of the true position of affairs at the time of the mtge.; (3) A. could not therefore be regarded as a lender for value without notice, & the deed must be set aside.—DE WITTE v. ADDISON (1899), 80 L. T. 207; 43 Sol. Jo. 243, O. A.

The contract was never filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Cos. The 300 shares were issued as fully paid up to B., who was the chairman & managing director of the co. down to the date of the winding up, soon after which event B. died. The 623 shares were issued as fully paid up to H., who transferred 134 of them for value to the appt., who was the paid secretary & solr. of the co. H. also transferred 450 others for value in the following way: 120 were transferred direct to B.; 100 were transferred to the appt., who transferred them for value to B.; & 230 more were transferred to strangers, who again transferred them, some for value, & a few for a nominal consideration only, to B. Upon B.'s death the appt. became his exor.:—Held: (1) the 230 shares having been transferred to purchasers without notice that they were not fully paid up, & being registered in the books of the co. as paid-up shares, must, as between the co. & the transferees, be treated as fully paid-up shares; (2) the transferees could give a good title to purchasers from them, whether with or without notice; (3) those shares when transferred to B. must be equally treated as paid up, although he had purchased them with notice that they were not in fact paid-up shares.

(4) The only exception, & the well-known exception, to the rule which protects a purchaser with notice taking from a purchaser without notice is that which prevents a trustee buying back trust property which he has sold, or, a fraudulent man who has acquired property by fraud saying he sold it to a bond fide purchaser without notice & has got it back again (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re STAPLEFORD COLLIERY Co., BARROW'S CASE (1880); 14 Ch. 247. ———.]—Not bound by restrictive covenant.]—The purchaser of land from one who has purchased it for value, without notice, either actual or constructive, of a restrictive covenant, is not bound by the covenant, although he himself had notice of it.

The lessee of premises N. carried on therein the business of a pork butcher. The lease contained a covenant by which he covenanted not to carry on therein any noisy or offensive trade other than that of a pork butcher. He was also lessee under a different landlord of premises X., in the same street, upon which he carried on the business of a general butcher. He sold & assigned to pltf. his interest in the last-mentioned premises, & the goodwill of his business as a general butcher, covenanting with pltf. that he, his exors., administrators, & assigns, would not "cut, sell or deal in fresh hind-quarter beef, mutton, veal, lamb, or poultry at or upon the premises N., or in connection with the business of a pork butcher now carried on there by him." He afterwards gave up business, & surrendered his lease of N. to the landlord; & a new lease thereof was granted to his son by the landlord, which lease contained a covenant that the lessee would not carry on upon the premises any noisy or offensive trade other than . . . not "that of a pork butcher," as in the old lease, but . . . "that of a butcher." At the time when the landlord accepted the surrender, he had not in fact notice of the restrictive covenant entered into by the father with pltf. as regards N., but the son, when the new lease was granted to him, knew of the existence of that covenant. The son afterwards set up the business of a general butcher on the premises:—Hid: the landlord was not affected with constructive notice of the father's covenant, & could grant to the son a lease free from the restriction of that covenant & the son therefore could not be restrained at the suit of the pltf. from carrying on the business of a general butcher at N.—*WILKES v. The lessee neglected to build, & the lease was sold by auction to the vendor at a large price. The vendor agreed to sell at an enhanced price to the purchaser, & the purchaser objected that, having regard to the amount of the price, it must be shown that the rent reserved by the lease was the best that could reasonably be obtained within sect. 7 (2) of the above Act. The vendor had no knowledge of the arrangement between the lessor & the lessee as to the reduction of the rent, & he insisted that, as purchaser for value without notice, he could make a good title to the purchaser:—Held: (1) inasmuch as the lease did not comply with the statutory requirements as to rent, & the lessee did not act in good faith within sect. 54 of the above Act, it was bad, & could be set aside as against a purchaser for value without notice; (2) assuming that the lease was voidable only & not void, the title was not such as ought to be forced upon the purchaser, since it depended on a doubtful question of fact, viz. whether his predecessor in title, the vendor, purchased without notice of the defect in the title.—Re HANDMAN & WILCOX'S CONTRACT, [1902] 1 Ch. 599; 71 L. ## SECT. 15.—TIME IS NOT OF THE ESSENCE OF A CONTRACT.

252. Application of maxim—Before Judicature Acts.]—A ct. of equity will relieve against, & enforce, specific performance, notwithstanding a failure to keep the dates assigned by the contract, either for completion, or for the steps toward completion, if it can do justice between the parties, & if there is nothing in the "express stipulations between the parties, the nature of the property, or the surrounding circumstances," which would make it inequitable to interfere with & modify the legal right. This is what is meant, & all that is meant, when it is said that in equity time is not of the essence of the contract (LORD CAIRNS, L.J.). —TILLEY v. THOMAS (1867), 3 Ch. App. 61; 17 L. T. 422; 32 J. P. 180; 16 W. R. 166, L. J.J.

253. ——— Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (7).]—The maxim that in equity the time fixed for completion is not of the essence of a contract does not apply to cases in which the stipulation as to time cannot be disregarded without injustice to one or other of the parties, or where the conduct of either party has been such as to disentitle him equitable relief; as where a vendor has been guilty of unnecessary delay in completion, & the purchaser has served him with a notice limiting a reasonable time at the expiration of which he will treat the contract as at an end.

Above sub-section does not apply to cases in which the ct. is asked to disregard a stipulation as to time in an action for common law relief, if it be established that under the circumstances equity would not, prior to the Act, have granted specific performance or restrained the action.—STICKNEY v. KEEBLE, [1915] A. C. 386; 84 L. J. Ch. 259; 112 L. T. 664, H. L.

254. ——— Intention of parties.]—Equity would infer an intention that time should be of the essence from what had passed between the parties before the signing of the contract. The intention must appear from what had passed before the contract, & its construction could not be affected in the contemplation of equity by what took place after it had once been entered into (LORD HALDANE). —*JAMSHED KHODARAM IRANI v. Part III. Sect. 1.]

Act, 1877 (c. 18), s. 46, to demise the settled messuage, works & premises to himself & his two partners for 21 years, the lease containing the usual lessee's covenants entered into by the three lessees jointly. A certain rent was reserved by the lease, but dehors the lease it was arranged between the partners that the tenant for life should be allowed to occupy the house rent free, & should receive an additional rent as compensation in the event of his ceasing to reside there. In an action by the remaindermen, after the death of the tenant for life, to recover possession of the premises from an assignee of the lease:—Held: (1) the lease was void for non-compliance with the requirements of Settled Estates Act, 1877 (c. 18), s. 46, both on the ground that the best rent had not been reserved, & also because the covenants in the lease, being joint covenants by a man & others with himself, were not enforceable at law, & consequently were not proper covenants within the sect., or such as the reversioners were entitled to have inserted in the lease; (2) the defence of purchase for value without notice did not avail deft. because the lease was granted in pursuance of a statutory power.

(3) "Covenant," in the Act, means a legal covenant which can be sued upon at law, & not some right which might or might not arise from equitable considerations.

(4) The donee of an ordinary power of leasing cannot validly exercise the power by leasing to himself either alone or jointly with others. Qu.:

whether, independently of express statutory authority or some long-established special custom, the donee can validly exercise such a power by leasing to a trustee for himself, as such an execution would seem to transgress the doctrine of equity forbidding a man to put himself in such a position that his interest conflicts with his duty.

If there is one doctrine better settled than another in a ct. of equity it is that a man shall not put himself in such a position that his interest conflicts with his duty. A man cannot be both buyer & seller, or lessor & lessee. Now to that principle there is said to be one exception, that, under powers of leasing, the donee of the power can lease to a trustee for himself. Assume that is so. It is a perfect anomaly. It is an exception which owes its existence to authority, & not, with all respect, to common sense. But it is clear to my mind that there is no authority, & no ground for saying, that the donee of a power of leasing could lease to himself, either alone or jointly with others, without the interposition of a trustee (FARWELL, J.).—BOYCE v. 261. Relief on ground of undue influence.—The rule of the ct., under which relief is granted on the ground of undue influence, does not depend upon the existence of some peculiar relation between the parties which the ct. knows by a particular name, such as trustee & cestui que trust, guardian & ward, solr. & client, etc.; but applies

n. — Partial remedy.—If any part of the relief to which an annuitant is entitled can be got in equity, although for the remainder he can proceed at law, a ct. of equity has jurisdiction to grant him general relief.—FRENCH v. MORGAN (1821), 2 Mol. 488.—IR.

o. Where general relief asked.—Where there is a prayer for general relief, equity will adapt its relief to the circumstances of the case.—BOYLE v. LYSAGHT (1787), 1 Ridg. Parl. Rep. 384.—IR.

p. Where statutory remedy provided.—A depositor in a savings bank cannot maintain a suit in a ct. of equity against the trustees; since Savings Bank Act, 1828, s. 46, has established arbitration as the only mode of proceeding in disputes between depositors & the institution.—COOKE v. COUNTRYTOWN (LORD) (1844), 6 I. Eq. R. 286.—IR.

q. Relief on ground of abuse of confidence by attorney.—It is a sufficient ground for the interference of equity that a person entrusted to act as attorney for all parties, abuses the confidence placed in him.—COSTIGAN v. HASTLER (1804), 2 Sch. & Lef. 159.—IR.

r. Relief against breach of condition—Where damages contingent.—Equity will not relieve against the breach of a condition precedent, where the damages accrued are contingent & cannot be estimated.—SWEET v. ANDERSON (1772), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 256.—IR.

s. Relief involving injustice to another.—Equitable relief will not be granted where injustice to another would result.—DAZZIEL v. HOME-SHEKERS' LAND CO. (1811), 16 W. L. R. 406; 20 Man. L. R. 736.—CAN.

t. Relief against re-entry.—The origin of the action for relief against re-entry for non-payment of rent is in the equitable jurisdiction of the ct.; & the granting relief is in the judicial discretion of the ct.; & the ct. has regard to the conduct of the party seeking to obtain such relief.—COVENTRY v. MCLEAN (1899), 22 O. R. 1.—CAN.

u. Relief after failure in defence at law.—Where a party had a clear right in regard to certain equities to set them up by way of equitable defence to an action at law, or to come to the Ct. of Ch., & by mistake pleaded them at law as a legal defence only, upon which he necessarily failed.—Held: this did not form any bar to relief, on the same grounds, in the Ct. of Ch.—ARNOLD v. ALLINOR (1869), 16 Gr. 13.—CAN.

v. Relief by leave to amend issue.—The ct. has jurisdiction, & will exercise a discretion to do substantial justice between the parties, & to that end will grant relief or indulgence to the party who has not given notice of his intention to ask for it, & although the matter is before the ct., upon the appln. of the opposite party.

Where an interpleader order had been granted to try the ownership of certain goods seized under fl. fa. an interpleader issue was tendered by one party which contained an error, the other side, whilst pointing out the error, refused to agree to its amendment, but gave notice that the issue would not be accepted or acted on, & then moved to set aside the writ of interpleader & notice of trial. The secretary refused the appln. & gave leave to amend the issue nunc pro tunc. On appeal the decision was sustained.—MULHOLLAND v. DOWNS (1868), 2 Ch. Ct. 233.—CAN.

c. Relief on ground of ignorance of law.—When money has been paid, or a conveyance executed, in ignorance of matter of law, this ct. has power to grant relief; which will not, however, be given when it is against good conscience that the party who made the mistake should be freed from the consequences of his error.—COOPER v. PHIBBS (1865), 17 I. Ch. R. 73; 17 Ir. Jur. 239; revised. L. R. 2 H. L. 149.—IR.

d. Relief where Crown rights involved.—The Ct. of Ch. has no jurisdiction to grant relief to a subject where the rights of the Crown are in question.—MILLER v. A.-G. (1862), 9 Gr. 558.—CAN.

e. Suit against alien temporarily in jurisdiction.—The equity ct. has jurisdiction to entertain a suit against an alien temporarily resident in the jurisdiction provided he is served while so resident, although the suit arises out of a contract made in France to be executed in New Caledonia.—AUSTRALIAN ASSETS CO., LTD. v. HIGGINSON (1897), 18 N. S. W. Eq. 189; 14 N. S. W. N. 97.—AUS.

f. Counterclaim for purely legal right.—The ct. of equity has no jurisdiction to entertain a counterclaim for a purely legal claim with the subject-matter of the original suit.—ERSKINE v. MCLAURIN (1901), 1 S. R. N. S. W. 162; 18 N. S. W. W. N. 214.—AUS.

g. Construction of lease.—Where in an instrument of lease there are words of present demise, but on the construction of the instrument there are material points to be afterwards settled, the instrument will be construed as an agreement for a lease only. In such case where the lease is not void for uncertainty, a ct. of equity has jurisdiction to entertain a suit by a lessee, asking that the portion demised may be ascertained, there being no legal demise of any land in respect of which plff. can recover in ejectment.—WILLIAMSON, LTD. v. DURNO, LTD. (1915), 15 S. R. N. S. W. 442.—AUS.

h. Enforcement of payment of rent when lease void.—It is part of the equitable jurisdiction of the ct. to enforce payment of rent when the lease is void, & when the value of such lease, if valid, would exceed $2,500, & the county ct. has no jurisdiction.—BRITISH COLUMBIA BOARD OF TRADE BUILDING ASSOCN., LTD. LIABILITY v.

TUPPER & PETERS (1901), 8 B. C. R. 291.—CAN.

k. Lien on proceeds of stolen money.—If the ct. can trace money or property, however obtained from the true owner, into any other shape, it will intervene to secure it for the true owner, by holding it to be his in equity, or by giving him a lien on it.—MERCHANTS' EXPRESS CO. v. MORTON (1868), 15 Gr. 274.—CAN.

l. Amendment of pleadings.—A ct. of equity has an inherent power to amend the pleadings in a cause, & an amendment may be made ex p., though, ordinarily, notice should be given.—WIGGINS v. HENDRICKS (1872), 1 Pug. 152.—CAN.

m. Over real estate of infants.—The power of the Equity Ct. over the real estate of infants in this province is more extensive than any such power which has been exercised in England.

If it be shown that by the disposal of the property the interest of the infant will be substantially promoted on account of any portion of the property being exposed to waste or dilapidation, or being wholly unproductive, or for any other reasonable cause, the ct. has a discretionary power to order a sale.—Re LAWLOR'S ESTATE (1871), 8 N. S. R. 153.—CAN.

aa. Power to award damages.—The power of the ct. to award damages is confined to the cases enumerated in Equity Act, s. 32, & to cases where plff. is forced to come into equity for relief, the measure of which is damages.—FELL v. NEW SOUTH WALES OIL & SHALE CO. (1889), 10 N. S. W. Eq. 255; 6 N. S. W. N. 51.—AUS.

bb. ——Under a covenant in a lease granting a right of way to a railway co., the lessees on a default were to forfeit & pay to the lessor $5 a day as liquidated damages, & not as a penalty.—Held: this was a proper case in which to grant relief under Ontario Judicature Act, 1895, s. 52 (3), by awarding actual damages estimated on a liberal scale.—TOWNSEND v. TORONTO, HAMILTON & BUFFALO RY. CO. (1896), 28 O. R. 195.—CAN.

cc. Powers of Supreme Court of Cape Colony.—The Supreme Ct. of Cape Colony is a ct. of equity as well as a ct. of common law, but it can administer equity only so far as such is consistent with the principles of the Roman-Dutch Law.—MILLS & SONS v. BENJAMIN BROTHERS' TRUSTEES, [1876] Buoh. 115.—S. AF.

dd. To review acts of judge.—A ct. of equity has no jurisdiction to review what is done by a judge as a judge.—TUGHAN v. CRAIG, [1918] 1 I. R. 505.—IR.

ee. Principles governing relief.—It is contrary to the rule of the ct., in dealing with persons who have not acted properly, to punish them more severely than justice to others renders necessary; & therefore, where school trustees wrongfully expended money in building on a site which had been changed by competent authority, relief

PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 7.

h. Infant—Whether guardian can bind him by personal covenant.]—A guardian cannot bind his minor ward by a personal covenant. But where a minor comes to ct. to have an account taken as between himself & his agent, offer to pay the balance, if ultimately found against pltf.; in which case, on further directions, the ct. may decree that he do pay such balance.—KNEBEL v. WHITE (1886), 2 Y. & C. Ex. 15; Donnelly v. 5 L. J. Ex. Eq. 98; 160 E. R. 293.

303. — Original sovereign claiming against agent of usurper.—Where the sovereign power in a state is for a time de facto exercised by an usurping individual or body the original sovereign on restoration is entitled on the ground of jus in rem to all public property which existed before the usurpation & is found in specie after its termination, & he also becomes entitled jure successionis to all other public property of the usurper. But in an English ct. of equity the latter right can only be enforced subject to the same correlative rights & obligations as if the usurper himself were seeking to enforce it. Therefore the original sovereign cannot have a decree for an account against an agent of the usurper, unless he submits to be bound by all such obligations as would have been binding upon the usurper if pltf.—U.S.A. v. 306. Delay in objection to account—Custom of merchants.—(1) Though length of time no bar betwixt merchant & merchant; yet if dealings betwixt them have ceased for several years, & one of them dies, & the surviving merchant brings a bill for an account, the ct. will not decree an account, but leave pltf. to his remedy at law.

(2) Among merchants, if an account current be sent from one to the other, who receives it & makes no objections for two or three posts, this is looked upon as an allowance of the account.—SHERMAN v. SHERMAN (1692), 2 Vern. 276; 23 E. R. 778.

308. Accounts rendered & accepted.—Although accounts rendered & not objected to are not of necessity to be considered as settled, yet they will be so treated where they have been entered in the books of the person to whom they were rendered, & the balances shown upon them have been paid.—HUNTER v. BELCHER (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 194; 10 L. T. 548; 10 Jur. N. S. 663; 12 W. R. 782; 46 E. R. 349, L. JJ.

Accounts between principal & agent.—See AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 445, Nos. 1343–1350.

309. Acquiescence in banking account—By customer.—When the accounts between banker & customer have been carried on for a series of years on a particular principle, the ct. will assume there is an agreement to that effect; but acquiescence in it does not amount to a settlement of account.

Acquiescence does not amount to a settlement of account, though it regulates the principle on which the accounts shall be taken.

Where it is simply a banker's account, it amounts to an agreement as to the mode in which that account should be kept, but it does not at all amount to a settlement of account; after it, the customer would be at liberty to dispute & contest the items though not the principle upon which the bank account is kept (ROMILLY, M.R.).—MOSSE v. #### B. Re-Opening Accounts.

(a) In General.

310. General rule—Not to be re-opened—When claim substantially denied.—No settled account ought to be opened, upon the mere suggestions of a bill in equity; especially, when the truth of such suggestions is fully & substantially denied by the answer.—DUNBAR v. LEM (1772), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 3; 1 E. R. 377, H. L.

311. — After death of person with whom account settled.—A. & B. contract for the purchase of an estate, which, two years afterwards, is conveyed to A. absolutely, who pays the purchase-money, & treats the estate as his own. On B.'s death, A., as the husband of one of his next of kin, settles accounts of B.'s personal estate with C., one of B.'s personal representatives, & makes no claim in respect of the above-mentioned purchase during C.'s life. He will not be allowed, after C.'s death, to say, that the purchase was a partnership transaction, & to claim a moiety of the price out of B.'s personal estate.—HUGHES v. EVANS, EVANS v. HUGHES (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 185; 1 L. J. O. S. Ch. 129; 57 E. R. 74.

Annotations:—Mentl. Wake v. Parker (1838), 2 Keen, 59; Re Defries, Nordon v. Levy (1883), 31 W. R. 720.

312. — Absence of fraud.—A party who has once admitted an account delivered to be correct, cannot afterwards file a bill to have the account taken in equity upon the mere allegation that he had no means of ascertaining that the account so delivered was correct, without charging specific acts of fraud against deft.—DARTHEZ v. LEE (1836), 2 Y. & C. Ex. 5; 5 L. J. Ex. Eq. 73; 160 E. R. 289.

313. — Absence of mistake.—A representation which admits of being made good by the maker of it will be binding upon him. Therefore, an entry in an account by trustees under a will crediting a legatee with the amount of her legacy, is binding on them when it is made knowingly, & there is nothing to show that it was

& it is found on taking the account that the agent has made advances to the guardian & the advances have been applied for the benefit of the minor, the agent ought to be allowed those advances in taking the accounts.

315. ———. ]—HILL v. CURTIS, No. 60, ante.

316. Compromise re-opened—Previous errors discovered.—A decree was made in a suit for taking & adjusting a complicated series of accounts. The decree was limited to 1825, under the impression that all previous accounts were correct. Upon discovery that errors existed in the earlier accounts, another suit was instituted, & after proceedings had been taken, a compromise was made, under which a sum of £220,000 was paid by plffs. On a motion for an injunction to restrain proceedings in Scotland, a question was made, whether the order for compromise precluded the taking of accounts prior to 1825, or whether that order included all the accounts between the parties:—Held: the compromise was binding from 1825, & defts. electing to so consider it the ct. directed the accounts prior to 1825 only to be taken.—STANTON v. CARRON CO. (1864), 11 L. T. 1; 10 Jur. N. S. 783; 12 W. R. 1120, H. L.

317. Audited corporation accounts—Interest on excessive overdraft—Action by Attorney-General.—A borough which was governed by the Municipal Corps. Act, 1882 (c. 50), had in March, 1903, exhausted all its borrowing powers & had in addition a large fluctuating overdraft at its bankers in respect of expenses previously incurred.

The borough kept its banking account in the name of its treasurer, & during 1903 & 1904 the bank charged interest quarterly on the overdraft, & the treasurer in his accounts with the borough debited the borough & credited himself with the charges for interest, & his accounts were audited under sects. 25-28 of the Act, by the borough auditors, who passed the charges for interest, & the audited accounts were submitted to & approved by the borough council. In an action against the treasurer by the A.-G., suing on relation of a Burgess, impeaching his accounts in respect of the charges for interest on the overdraft & claiming an injunction to restrain him from making any further payments for such interest out of the borough funds:—Held: the fact that deft.'s accounts had been audited under the Act was no bar to the action, there being nothing in the Act which made such audit finally binding & conclusive on the borough & the burgesses.—A.-G. v. DE WINTON, [1906] 2 Ch. 106; 75 L. J. Ch. 612; 70 J. P. 368; 54 W. R. 499; 22 T. L. R. 446; 50 Sol. Jo. 405; 4 L. G. R. 549.

B. (a).

314 i. General rule—Not to be re-opened.—A ct. of equity acting upon the principle that it is always the aim of a ct. of equity to finally determine as far as possible all questions concerning the subject of the suit, is bound to cause an account to be taken up to the time of the decree, the account so taken being considered binding & the parties not being at liberty, except in peculiar circumstances, to re-open it in another suit.—KULLYAN DASS v. SHIBO NUNDUN PURSHAD SINGH (1872), 18 W. R. 65.—IND.

314 ii. ———. ]—The mere existence of fiduciary relationship between attorney & client will not entitle the client to have a settled account, concluded by mtgs., reopened unless sufficient cause be shown, i.e. a prima facie case is made out that the bills are extortionate, or at any rate incorrect.—SHAMALDHONE DUTT v. LAKSHMI DEBI (1908), 1 L. R. 36 Cal. 493.—IND.

314 iii. ———. ]—Where plff. & deft. who stood in relation of client & attorney, settled an account consisting entirely of money claims, & into which no charge for professional services was introduced, & plff. by deed, part of the consideration whereof was a balance stated as due to deft. on such settlement of the account, conveyed to deft. a rentcharge upon certain trusts; a bill having been filed to impeach the deed & open the account, the ct. on a motion for a receiver pending the suit, would not consider the transaction as a dealing between attorney & client, & refused to appoint a receiver or make any order which might prejudice the case at the hearing.—CONWAY v. MURPHY (1837), 6 Ir. L. Rec. N. S. 343.—IR.

314 iv. ———. ]—Accounts taken in a foreclosure suit in which the tenant for life of the equity of redemption is a party, & present at the taking thereof, will be binding generally upon the tenant in tail. But he will be at liberty to surcharge & falsify. But when the tenant for life of the equity of redemption, although a party, was not actually present at the taking of the accounts; & all the decrees in the suit were had upon sequestration, & some degree of imputation was thrown upon the manner in which the accounts were taken:—Held: claimant in remainder was entitled to open them generally.—WARREN v. 314 v. ———. ]—A deft. was sued by a firm of registered money-lenders for the balance due on foot of a promissory note dated Apr. 6, 1916. With his defence he paid money into ct., which was drawn out by plffs. in full satisfaction of their claim, & counter-claimed to have five former transactions dated in Feb. 1911, Mar. 1912, Feb. 1913, Mar. 1914, & Mar. 1915, respectively, reopened on the ground that they formed one & the same transaction, that the rates of interest charged therein were excessive, & that the transactions were harsh and unconscionable. Each of the five formed transactions had been closed at the end of its respective years without any objection by the deft.:—Held: in the absence of any active malpractice, deception, or unfair pressure on the part of plffs., it was impossible to reopen dealings voluntarily settled so long ago.—STONE v. The accounts were made out by one of the partners; & after the death of two of the other partners, it was discovered that the accounts were fraudulent.—Held: the fourth partner was entitled to have the accounts of the partnership taken from the date of the articles.—OLDAKER v. 324. Administrator's accounts—Lapse of seventeen years.]—A. died intestate in the year 1802, leaving his wife & several children surviving him. B., his brother, by means of misrepresentation, procured letters of administration to be granted to him, & placed himself in loco parentis to the children. The youngest child attained twenty-one in Sept. 1823, & in May, 1825, he signed an account furnished him by B., acknowledging, in writing, at the foot of it, that he had had a satisfactory investigation of that account, & the administrator's general account of the intestate's estate & effects, & confirmed the same. In Jan. 1828, he received the sum appearing on the signed account, as the balance due to him in respect of his share of the intestate's estate. In Sept. 1843, he filed a bill seeking to open the account. At the hearing, divers errors were proved to exist in the administrator's accounts; some entries made by the administrator in his books being fictitious, & some items being omitted in his accounts. Notwithstanding seventeen years had elapsed since the settlement, & two years since the discovery of errors in the administrator's accounts, the ct. set aside the account, & decreed the same to be taken anew, declining to limit the relief to the right to surcharge & falsify the account.—ALLFREY v. 341. —.]—In order to entitle a party to open a settled account, it is not sufficient merely to prove the existence in the account of errors, which a ct. of equity might consider improper charges or omissions, without reference to what may have been the conduct of the party in agreeing to such account; because, in the absence of fraud or pressure, every item in an account, of which, at the time of settlement, the parties are fully cognisant, may be considered as the subject of special agreement between them, which neither party is at liberty to repudiate.—MAUND v. ALLIES (1840), 5 Jur. 860, L. C.

342. —.]—An account was settled, & releases executed between the residuary legatees of a partner & the representatives of the surviving partner. Numerous & important errors in the account having been proved, the release was set aside, but having regard to the lapse of time, & the loss of books & documents the ct. declined opening the accounts altogether, but gave liberty only to surcharge & falsify.

Where a release has been executed, & the parties have for a long space of time acquiesced in it, the mere proof of errors will not, in the absence of fraud, induce the ct. either to set it aside or to give leave to surcharge & falsify; but the nature & amount of the errors alleged & proved, may have a very considerable effect in the consideration of the question, whether the release was fairly obtained.—*MILLAR v. 344. —.]—Declaration alleged that pltf. let mines to deft., for twenty-one years, at a clear annual rent of £400 & a tonnage rent on the ore raised; the tonnage rent, if it amounted to or exceeded £400, to be taken instead of the £400; &, if it fell short of the £400, the £400 to be paid, & the deficiency to be made up by deductions from the tonnage rent of subsequent years; &, if in any year the tonnage rent, upon ordinary working, did not come up to the £400, the excess of payment (if any) in previous years, above the £400, might be set off against the £400 due on such year; the meaning of the parties being that the rent of £400 should at all events be paid, if more than that was paid in any one year, & afterwards the mines should not produce enough to pay the £400, deft. should not, throughout the term, be liable to pay more than the £400 per annum, inclusive of the extra rent raised by tonnage rent: covenant by deft. to pay the rents; breach, non-payment of tonnage rent upon the quantity of ore raised. Plea: That deft. annually accounted with pltf. each year concerning all the ore raised in that year, & the amount of tonnage rent; &, on each accounting, a certain sum was agreed by deft. & pltf. to be the balance due, & the balances were paid by deft. to pltf., & accepted by pltf., in full satisfaction & discharge of the tonnage rent payable. Replication: That the accountings were not correct, but ore was omitted which ought to have been included, by mistake, & through ignorance of facts on the part of the pltf.; & the balances stated were for less ore than was raised; & the balances were paid & accepted on such accountings. On demurrer to plea & replication:—Held: the plea, showing only a statement of accounts on one side, did not show a statement binding pltf., at any rate not conclusively, & was at any rate answered by the replication showing error in the account, though not fraud.—PERRY v. ATTWOOD (1856), 6 E. & B. 691; 25 L. J. Q. B. 408; 27 L. T. O. S. 170; 2 Jur. N. S. 1071; 4 W. R. 608; 119 E. R. 1021.

345. Omission of items.—A pltf. applying for an injunction to restrain a deft. from proceeding at law to recover the amount of a promissory note, on the ground that there are accounts subsisting between them, was precluded by having settled & signed an account leaving a balance in favour of deft. If there have been other subsequent accounts between them, the ct. will not consider that a ground for interfering, where deft. states that pltf. has withheld his accounts, & refused, though often requested, to come to a settlement. Charges for business done, as attorney or agent, will not raise an account so as to give such attorney or agent an equity against the holder of his promissory note, as money mutually due on either side will, for such demands are rather matter of set-off. Nor does it destroy the effect in equity of a settlement of accounts that charges for business done before the liquidation of the accounts were not included in the account so settled.—HIRST v. PEIRSE (1817), 4 Price 330; 146 E. R. 483.

By mutual error a debt of £2000 owing to the partnership, but which was not then known to exist, was omitted in the consideration by both parties; C. afterwards received it:—Held: A., notwithstanding the release, was entitled to his share of the debt, but that to obtain it the whole account must be reopened.—PRITT v. CLAY (1843), 6 Beav. 503; 1 L. T. O. S. 409; 49 E. R. 920.

From the accounts so rendered, the clerk to the trustees, pursuant to Turnpike Roads Act, 1822, c. 126, made out & transmitted to the clerk of the peace a statement of the revenue & expenditure of the trust, & these statements were duly published as required by law, & the trustees, with the money in hand, paid off debts of the trust. Pltf. subsequently claimed a larger sum as due to him in respect of payments in these years, the whole amount of which ought to have been paid for & brought into the previous accounts, but was knowingly omitted by pltf., but without any intention on his part to receive more than was due to him:—Held: pltf. was estopped from recovering the excess from the trustees, they having acted upon the faith of the statements in the accounts originally rendered.—CAVE v. MILLS (1862), 7 H. & N. 913; 31 L. J. Ex. 265; 6 L. T. 650; 8 Jur. N. S. 363; 10 W. R. 471; 158 E. R. 740.

By the custom of the market (Liverpool), the price does or does not include the deposit according as the scrip has issued or not: & the published share lists show how this is. Deft., before the scrip issued, sent pltf. bought & sold notes, stating the price without the deposit; but he daily sent pltf. the share lists. After the scrip issued, deft. paid the deposit; but he still omitted, in accounts afterwards sent, to debit pltf. with the deposit. Pltf. had made these purchases for his own principals; & he debited them at a price not including the deposit; but whether the contract, as between him & the principals, was a time bargain, or shares were actually delivered, did not appear:—Held: deft. was not, upon either supposition, precluded from charging for the deposit, & setting it off, as in the former case.

They dealt with pltf. as the principal in the transaction, & are not concluded by having, by mistake, omitted to charge him with a payment of which he has had the benefit by the actual possession of the scrip, which could only have been obtained by the payment in question (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—*DALLS v. 349. One error proved.—In a case where the accounting party was the solr. or agent of the party sought to be charged, & it appeared that an item of £600 was inserted for professional charges in the account which it was sought to treat as settled, no bill of costs having been delivered, & the £600 exceeding by £75 the sum really due:—Held: that this was not such an error as could be set right by a decree to surcharge & falsify, but that the account must be dealt with as an open account.

A settled account, otherwise unimpeachable, in which an error is proved to exist, may be subjected to a decree to surcharge & falsify, upon the supposition that one error having been proved others may be expected upon investigation to be discovered; but if the relative situation of the parties, or the manner in which the settlement took place, or the nature of the error proved, show that the alleged settlement ought not to be considered as an act binding upon the party signing, & that it would be inequitable for the accounting party to take advantage of it, the ct. is not content with enabling the party to surcharge & falsify an account which never ought to have been so settled, but directs the taking of an open account (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—*COLEMAN v. The account was not a complicated one, & among the items was, "Paid Messrs. S. & Co. costs relating to exorship, & counsel's fees & payments made by them, £116 17s. 2d." The ultimate balance shown was £331 3s. 4d., the bulk of the testator's property having been disposed of by specific bequests. The residuary legatees attended, signed at the foot of the account a memorandum, "We have examined & approve of the foregoing account," received cheques for their shares, & executed a release to the trustees & exors. The trustees & exors. never informed the residuary legatees that they were entitled to have a bill of costs delivered, & to have it taxed if they thought fit. Nine years afterwards three of the residuary legatees brought an action to have it declared that the release was not binding on them, & to have a bill of costs delivered & taxed. On production of documents there were found in the costs ledger of the solrs. items which came to more than the amount charged for costs in their account, there was no evidence of excessive charge beyond a deposition by an experienced solr's. clerk that in his opinion at least one-sixth would be taxed off the amount of costs appearing in the ledger, & there was no proof of error in the rest of the account:—Held: although it was the duty of the solr. trustees to have informed the residuary legatees that they were entitled to have a bill of costs, & if they thought fit to have it taxed or moderated, the omission to do so was not by itself a sufficient ground for opening a settled account; in order to do so it was necessary to show that injustice would be done by allowing the settled account to stand; if excessive charges had been shown the account must have been opened, but as no error had been shown the action had rightly been dismissed.—*Re WEBB, LAMBERT v. stated between them, & the amount due for loans, interest & costs was agreed, & C. took mtges. for the agreed amounts. By 1904 all the mtges., except two, had been paid off, either by sales or by K. paying off & taking reconveyances of the mtges., & on each occasion the amount due was agreed. In 1905 C. died, & in 1908 his exors. brought an action against K. to enforce the two subsisting mtges. K. counterclaimed for an account of all the transactions & dealings between himself & C. from 1883, alleging (as the fact was) that he had had no independent advice, & in some of the settled accounts he proved errors in respect of interest, etc.:—Held: K. was entitled to open all the accounts & to tax, surcharge & falsify, & that his right was not barred by Stat. Limitations, although all the settled accounts but one had been agreed more than six years before the date of his counterclaim.

How far the ct. will open accounts upon proof of error appearing in some but not all of them must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case, & I think that where the relation subsisting between the parties, the character of the errors, & the connection of the accounts, lead to the inference that the errors proved in some cases may be expected to appear in all, there the ct. should give relief in respect of all (NEVILLE, J.).—*CHEESE v. 362.1. Mistakes in account—Absence of fraud—Long acquiescence.]—Under a decree pronounced in 1817, in a suit by the grantees of an annuity charged upon lands against the grantor's judgment creditors, who were in possession, by virtue of writs of elegit, an account was taken of what was due to the grantees, & a receiver was appointed over the lands. The grantor was not a party to the suit, & died in 1842, without having impeached the accuracy of the account. The grantees having also died, his exor., in 1848, up to which time the receiver had continued in possession, filed a bill against the co-heiresses of the grantor, praying a revivor of the former suit, an account of what was due for arrears of the annuity, & that the sum found due should be declared a charge upon the lands. Defts. insisted that the account taken in the former suit in the absence of the grantor was not binding upon them.—Held: in consequence of his acquiescence during 36 years, & their subsequent acquiescence for six years, they were not entitled to have the account taken de novo; but they should be at liberty to surcharge & falsify it.—L'ESTRANGE v. WHITE (1850), 1 L. Ch. R. 15.—IR.

383. — Constructive trustee appropriating profits—Twenty-five years acquiescence.]—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 40, applies to personal legacies; but, independently of that statute, long acquiescence on the part of the legatee will bar his claim against an exor., against whom a case of nonfeasance has been made out.

25 years of acquiescence & other circumstances form a bar to a claim for account against a constructive trustee, who had appropriated to his own use the whole profits of a trade bequeathed to him under certain restrictions jointly with pltf.—PORTLOCK v. GARDNER (1842), 1 Hare, 594; 11 L. J. Ch. 313; 6 Jur. 795; 66 E. R. 1168.

384. — Acquiescence by wife—Disposal of husband's estate.]—A married woman, by deed poll, in execution of a power reserved to her in her marriage settlement appointed certain estates to a trustee in trust to sell & apply the proceeds to pay costs, incumbrances, & mtges. on the estates, which had been raised to pay the expenses of the husband in building thereon, & the debts of the husband, & the residue to her own separate use. The greater part of the premises comprised in the deed poll were sold by the husband, & the proceeds of the sales, & the rents & profits of the part unsold, were received by him. After his death a bill was filed by the trustees exors. of his will, one of whom was the trustee of the deed poll, for administration of his estate. The decree ordered an account of the estates comprised in the deed poll, & of the rents & profits of such estates, & the proceeds of any sales thereof, & an inquiry whether testator had applied any of his moneys in payment of incumbrances, & whether anything was due to his estate in respect thereof. The master had not taken an account of the produce of the sales, & of the rents & profits of the unsold estates, as between the trustee of the deed poll & testator's estate. On an application for an inquiry & account by the representatives of the wife against the husband's estate:—Held: they would be refused on the ground of acquiescence by the wife.—LEA v. GRUNDY (1855), 24 L. T. O. S. 287; 1 Jur. N. S. 951.

385. — Acquiescence over thirteen years.]—G., being trustee of certain moneys for S. & his children, died, in 1838, having by his will devised his copyhold & freehold estates to trustees upon trust to sell & pay the proceeds of sale to his exors. in aid of his personal estate, & after the payment of his debts, etc., he gave the residue of his personal estate including such proceeds of sale, to his wife absolutely. The trustees allowed the widow to enter into possession of the copyholds, but sold the freeholds & applied the proceeds as directed by the will. In 1853, S. & two of his children filed a bill on behalf of themselves & all other creditors of G., stating that he had expended for his own benefit, & had never invested the moneys which he held in trust for them. They then learned that the widow was in possession of the copyholds, but they took no step to obtain possession of the rents, or to obtain a receiver. G.'s estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, three of the children of S., who had died in the meantime, instituted this suit in 1866, to claim the rents received by the widow since the death of her husband, & praying for a declaration that the trustee of G.'s will was guilty of a breach of trust in allowing her to receive the rents, & that he might be compelled to account for them:—Held: even assuming that G.'s will created a trust & that Stat. Limitations did not apply, plffs. were barred from recovering by their own laches, & the bill would accordingly be dismissed with costs.—GWYNNE v. GELL (1868), 20 L. T. 508.

388. — —.]—A mtgee. of an equitable life interest in leaseholds was put in receipt of the rents during the mtgor.'s lifetime, by order of the ct. in an administration suit. The mtgor. disappeared, & was absent more than seven years, the mtgee. remaining in possession. The ct. having assumed the mtgor. must be presumed to be dead, & that on the facts her death must be taken to have happened shortly after her disappearance:—Held: the mtgee. occupied no fiduciary position towards the persons entitled in remainder, but the remaindermen had been guilty of no laches in not disturbing the mtgee.'s possession before the end of seven years, & therefore, in analogy of the legal remedy, an account of the rents received should be directed for the period of six years from the presentation of the remaindermen's petition claiming an account, & not merely from the presentation of the petition.

The rule that where an account in equity is directed against a person in receipt of rents without any title to same, the account will be taken only from the time the proceedings were commenced, does not apply where there has been no laches on the part of the person really entitled.—*HICKMAN v. The son died, & the father furnished a statement of the partnership accounts to the extrix. of the son, which did not contain any particular items, & which showed some debts due to the partnership to be outstanding. No further accounts or information were called for, till after the death of the father, which took place 22 years after his accounts had been furnished. An investigation of the partnership books was then made, & several errors in the furnished accounts were stated to be found. The representatives of the son then filed a bill to have the partnership accounts taken:—Held: they were barred by long acquiescence, but accounts would be directed to be taken of the debts which were outstanding when the accounts were furnished by the father.—*SCOTT v. The owner died in 1816; the trustee died in 1818; & in 1828 a bill for an account was filed by the representative of the former against the representatives of the latter. The answer was filed in the following year, but no further proceedings were taken in the suit until 1839, when the cause was set down & was heard in 1840:—Held: (1) no such laches existed as to bar the account; (2) as regarded the lapse of time, the case was to be looked at in the same light now as at the filing of the bill.—DICKENSON v. HOLLAND (LORD) (1840), 2 Beav. 310; 48 E. R. 1200.

The tenant for life died in Feb. 1853. In Oct. in that year, the remainderman petitioned for the transfer of fund, & payment of the last dividend to him:—Held: the money in ct. could not be considered as land, for the purpose of Distress for Rent Act, 1837 (c. 19), & therefore, the exors. of the tenant for life took no part of the last half-year's dividend.—Re LONGWORTH'S ESTATE (1853), 1 K. & J. 1; 2 Eq. 400. ————— Accruing after death of life tenant.]—Re MUIRHEAD, MUIRHEAD v. HILL*, No. 410, post.

401. — Dividend on proceeds of compulsory purchase—Payable under order of court—Not payable "under any instrument."]—Where lands, subject to a settlement made before Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), are taken by a co. under Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18), & the dividends ordered to be paid to the tenant in possession, the former Act does not apply to the dividends, whatever may have been the nature & date of the leases under which the lands were held by the tenants.

The instrument to be referred to is the instrument which gives the right to the dividends in question; the purchase-moneys were paid into ct., & invested in consols because the lands were compulsorily taken under Parliamentary powers, & not by reason of any power or trust in the settlement; & the dividends were ordered to be paid to the tenants for life, because they are the persons entitled to the rents & profits of the land under the settlement. But the orders of the ct. are not instruments within Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), & therefore, no right to any apportionment of these dividends arises (SIR JOHN STUART, V.-C.).—Re LAWTON ESTATES (1866), L. R. 3 Eq. 469.

402. ————]—By a will which came into operation subsequently to the passing of Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), real estate was devised to A. for life subject to impeachment for waste, with remainder to B. for life without impeachment for waste, with remainders over. With the sanction of the ct. timber on the estate was cut down & sold, & the proceeds of sale invested; & the dividends were ordered to be paid to A. during his life:—Held: the whole of a dividend which accrued due shortly after the death of A. was payable to B., & could not be apportioned between him & the representatives of A.—JODRELL v. JODRELL (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 461; 38 L. J. Ch. 507; 20 L. T. 349; 17 W. R. 602.

403. ——— Dividends from securities.]—A testator, after devising his real estates in strict settlement, gave a general power to his trustees, at the request of the tenant for life, to sell or exchange, with a direction that the lands purchased or taken in exchange should be settled upon the same trusts as those sold or given in exchange; & he declared, that if, at any time thereafter, any person thereby made tenant for life of his said real estates should, when he or she should become beneficially entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents of his real estates, be under the age of 21 years, then it should be lawful for his trustees, during the minority of such tenant for life, to hold possession of his real estates, & receive the rents, etc., thereof, & out of the same apply any annual sum, as they should think proper, towards the maintenance of such minor, & subject thereto, to lay out & invest the surplus rents in their names in the funds, or at interest upon Government or real securities, so as that such rents might accumulate in the way of compound interest, & to stand possessed of & interested in the said trust monies, upon the same trusts therein declared concerning the money to arise from the sale by that his will authorised to be made of his said real estates. At the time of testator's death, the tenant for life was a minor, but had since, on June 29, attained 21 years of age. A sum of stock had accumulated from the investment of the surplus rents during his minority, the dividends on which were payable in Jan. & July. The rents of the estates were due in May & Nov.:—Held: the case came within the provisions of Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), & both the half-yearly dividends & rents payable in the July & Nov. next following the day on which the tenant for life attained 21 must be apportioned.—SHIPPERDON v. TOWER (1844), 3 L. T. O. S. 199; 8 Jur. 485.

The son attained 21 between the periods of payment of the half-yearly dividends:—Held: there should be no apportionment, & he was entitled to the whole half-yearly dividend received after he came of age.—*CAMPBELL v. 407. ——— Profits from business.]—Testator directed his exors. to manage & carry on the share he might have in any colliery at the time of his decease, & to permit his wife to receive the profits thereof during her life. At the time of his death testator was entitled to a share in a colliery partnership, carried on by him in partnership with four other persons under a deed which contained a provision for yearly settlements of accounts, & that upon such yearly settlements the clear profits, or a portion thereof, if the majority in value of the partners should so direct, should be added to the joint stock of the co. or be divided between the partners in proportion to their respective shares, or passed to their respective separate accounts. For a considerable period after the death of testator no dividend was paid to the partners, but the undivided profits, when there were any, were accumulated. Afterwards dividends were paid which did not exhaust the profits; no resolutions were passed declaring that any portion of the profits should be added to the joint stock of the co., but the undivided credit balances were at the end of each year carried forward to the profit & loss account & employed for the general purposes of the concern. On the death of the widow:—Held: the accumulations of profits made during her life & not divided belonged to testator's estate & not to her representatives, but they were entitled, under above Act, to an apportioned share of the profits made in the year which was current at the time of her decease.—*STRAKER v. The widow died on July 24, 1915. Part of the residuary estate consisted of stocks in three railway cos. In Sept. 1915, each of these railway cos. declared a dividend, payable about a month afterwards, for the half-years ending on the preceding June 30, 1915:—Held: Apportionment Act, 1870 (c. 35), applied, & the estate of the tenant for life was entitled to the whole of these dividends.

414. — Express stipulation—Whether applicable except in instrument of gift.]—A testator bequeathed certain shares in a co. to his trustees upon trust to pay “the income arising therefrom” to his wife for life. Testator died on Jan. 4, 1906. Some time after his death a dividend for the financial year ending Oct. 31, 1905, was declared. The full dividend for the next financial year was not yet declared. The co.’s articles provided (inter alia) as follows:—Art. 90: “Every dividend, whether arising from past or current profits, shall for all purposes be deemed to accrue & fall due upon the day on which it is declared, & not before.” Art. 91: “Every dividend shall belong & be paid, subject to the co.’s lien, to those members who shall be on the register at the date when every such dividend is declared, notwithstanding any subsequent transfer or transmission of shares.”—Held: as between testator’s estate & the widow, those articles did not amount to an express stipulation against apportionment within above Act, & the dividends were therefore apportionable.

432. ———.]—A testatrix gave her real, & the residue of her personal, estate to M. for life, & after her death, subject to the provision after-contained, to H., his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns. The proviso was, that M. should have power to charge both estates with £5,000. By a codicil testatrix gave all her real estates to M. in fee simple, free from all charges created by her will:—Held: the personal estate was liable to the whole charge, the real estate being exonerated, & there being no title to apportionment between the two.—*TATLOCK v. 433. ———.]—Failure of gift of real estate to charity.]—A testator was entitled to £800 secured by mtge. of the life interest of a widow lady in the funds held on the trusts of her marriage settlement & the reversionary interest of one of her children in the same funds. At the date of the mtge. & of testator's death part of these funds were pure personalty & the rest was invested under a power in the settlement on mtge. of real estate. Testator bequeathed to charities such part of his residuary estate as could be so bequeathed:—Held: the £800 was an interest in land within Charitable Uses Act, 1735 (c. 36), s. 3, & could not be given by will to a charity & there could not be any apportionment so as to make a part of the sum available for charity.—*Re WATTS, CORNFORD v. 444. Deed void at law.]—There is jurisdiction in equity to order a deed, forming a clog upon a title, to be delivered up, though void at law. Accordingly, a demurrer to a bill to have a deed, fraudulent & void, as in contemplation of bkpcy., delivered up, was overruled.—HAYWARD v. DIMSDALE (1810), 17 Ves. 111; 34 E. R. 43.

SUB-SECT. 5.—INSTRUMENT GIVING RISE TO VEXATIOUS DEMANDS.

449. Anticipation of vexatious demands.]—

(1) The Ct. of Ch. has jurisdiction, even after the grantor of an annuity has twice failed at law in his attempts to set aside the annuity, to declare it void & order the securities to be delivered up, & the payments of the annuity from the date of it to be deducted from the consideration paid for it.

(2) The price paid by the grantee, & not that by the assignee, is to be taken in the account.

(3) There is also an ancient jurisdiction in this ct. to order bills, policies or assurance, & annuity deeds to be delivered up; the same too is always prayed in policy causes in the Exchequer; & it is a wholesome jurisdiction to order void instruments to be delivered up, upon which vexatious demands might afterwards be made (LORD ELDON, C.).—BROMLEY v. 450. —.]—There is jurisdiction in equity to grant an injunction, or order an instrument to be delivered up, though it might be the subject of an action. This jurisdiction is discretionary, whether an issue or an action shall be directed or permitted.

The very circumstances that the holder may compel you to defend yourself against the demand with the expense & vexation attending a suit is a more reasonable ground for entertaining jurisdiction originally than for departing from the established doctrine. Therefore, I do not admit that this ct. will not examine the facts of the case, with a view to determine whether relief shall be administered or not, merely because an action may be maintained (LORD ELDON, C.).—JERVIS v. 458. Immoral consideration.]—A daughter joined her father in covenanting to surrender a copyhold by way of mtge. to A., for a sum of money lent by him to the father. Part of the consideration was the permission of the father to allow A. to continue his visits to the daughter, whom he was seducing or had seduced. Upon a bill to enforce the deed & a cross-bill to cancel it, the ct. at first considered that it could not interfere for either party, but ultimately ordered the deed to be cancelled, & that A. should pay the costs of both suits, except those of the father.—*W— v. If there is a legal instrument which has no defect on the face of it, which makes it impossible to sue at law, or which states the only possible objection there can be for suing at law upon the face of it, this ct. would not interfere. But if there be a legal instrument having no defect, which, from various circumstances it would be inequitable to allow a person to sue upon or proceed at law, or if there be a good defence at law, but time may produce this effect that it may cause the person charged under that instrument to lose the evidence of his defence at law, then this ct. would interfere & cause the instrument to be delivered up (*SIR J. ### SECT. 1.—EFFECT OF THE JUDICATURE AND SIMILAR ACTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

475. Administration of law & equity in one tribunal—No fusion of systems.]—It is stated very plainly that the main object of Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), was to assimilate the transaction of equity business & common land business by different cts. of judicature. It has been sometimes inaccurately called "the fusion of land & equity"; but it was not any fusion, or anything of the kind; it was the vesting in one tribunal the administration of law & equity in every cause, action, or dispute which should come before that tribunal. That was the meaning of the Act. Then as to that very small number of cases in which there is an actual conflict, it was decided that in all cases where the rules of equity & law were in conflict the rules of equity should prevail. That was to be the mode of administering the combined jurisdiction & that was the meaning of the Act (JESSEL, M.R.).—SALT v. COOPER (1880), 16 Ch. D. 544; 50 L. J. Ch. 589; 43 L. 476. — Care & custody of children.]—Re GOLDSWORTHY*, No. 485, post.

477. —]—A son who was heir-in-law to his father, who was one of the exors. & trustees of his father's will, though he had not proved the will, & whose Christian names & description were identical with those of his father, after his father's death, executed mtges. of freehold & leasehold property of the father & applied the mtge. money to his own purposes. He handed over the title deeds to the mtgees. The transaction took place without the knowledge of his mother & sister, who were co-trustees & co-extrices. with him, & who had proved the will. The will had not been registered in the Middlesex Registry, though the property was situate in that county. The mtge. deeds were registered. They purported to be executed by the absolute owner of the property, & the solr. who acted for both parties believed the son to be the absolute owner. The son told him nothing about the father's will. The solr. searched the Middlesex Registry. The son took a beneficial interest under the trusts of the father's will. After the son's death the fraud was discovered, & the mother & sister, as trustees of the father's will, brought an action against the mtgees. claiming a declaration that the mtges. were void against them, & delivery up of the title deeds. The other beneficiaries under the will were made defts. :—Held: (1) the son in executing the mtge. deeds was personating his father, & the deeds were forgeries & passed nothing to the mtgees. except the son's beneficial interest under the father's will, & the mtgees. could obtain no title by virtue of the Middlesex Registry Act, 1708 (c. 20); (2) the mtgees. must deliver up the title deeds to plffs.

Another point taken was that, at any rate as regards the leaseholds, there was a deposit of the title deeds by the exor., & it is said, a ct. of equity will not interfere with the possession thus acquired. But here we have the owner of the legal title coming into a ct. of law & equity, & saying, there is an attempt to deprive me, not only of my property, but of my title deeds. The legal title is shown to be in plffs., & then, not merely as a ct. of equity, but as a ct. of law, we ought to make the order which has been made in the ct. below for the delivery up of the title deeds to the legal owners of the property (COTTON, L.J.).—*Re COOPER, COOPER v. 478. —]—A legal mtgee. had asked for the deeds which the mtgor., who was his solr., made excuses for not giving to him. The mtgor. afterwards deposited the deeds with another mtgee. as security for money advanced without notice of the legal mtge. In an action by the legal mtgee. for foreclosure :—Held: (1) he had not been guilty of fraud or negligence amounting to fraud, & he could not be postponed to the mtgee. by deposit by reason of any negligence short of that; (2) the legal mtgee. was entitled to recover the deeds from the mtgee. by deposit, notwithstanding he was a purchaser for value without notice; & Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (11), did not alter the rule of law on the subject.

The above Act says that every ct. is to administer everything, legal relief & equitable relief, & in the present case I am bound under the Act to administer legal relief & give the relief which plff. would have had at law (NORTH, J.).—*MANNERS v. reason: before Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), a plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice was not available against either discovery or relief claimed in those cases in which the Ct. of Ch. had concurrent jurisdiction with the common law cts. upon legal titles. Sect. 24, sub-sect. 2 of the Act therefore, gave no protection to defts., the ct. having now complete jurisdiction over the whole action. (2) The main object of Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), was to enable the parties to a suit to obtain in that suit & without the necessity of resorting to another ct., all remedies to which they are entitled in respect of any legal or equitable claim or defence properly advanced by them so as to avoid a multiplicity of legal proceedings (LORD WATSON).—*IND, COOPE & Co. v. 480. Confers no new jurisdiction.]—(1) I think that the true construction of Jud. Acts is that they confer no new rights; they only confirm the rights which previously were to be found existing in the cts. either of law or of equity; if they did more, they would alter the rights of parties, whereas in truth they only change the procedure (BRETT, L.J.).

(2) I will first mention Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 24 (4) & (7). These provisions enable the cts. of common law to deal with equitable rights & to give relief upon equitable grounds; but they do not confer new rights: the different divisions of the High Ct. may dispose of matters within the jurisdiction of the Ch. & the common law cts.; but they cannot proceed upon novel principles (COTTON, L.J.).—*BRITAIN v. Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 34, or under the general powers of the cts. of law & equity kept alive, & conferred on the High Ct. & the Ct. of Appeal, by Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 24 (5) & (7).

Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 24 (7), only enables the High Ct. & every branch of it to give effect to all the remedies which the parties were, in the language of the Act, entitled to, that is to say, as could have been given by any ct. which was made a member of the High Ct. by the above Act. It seems to me it does not confer jurisdiction upon the High Ct. to make such an order as is sought here; for no ct. had power to make such an order prior to the above Act.—THE JAMES WESTOL, [1905] P. 47; 74 L. On the question of law deft. submitted that in an action such as the present which before Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), could be brought only in a common law ct., a plea of Stat. Limitations could not be met by a reply of fraudulent concealment:—Held: in a purely common law action the plea of Stat. Limitations was an absolute

496. — Contribution to loss in joint adventure.]—By agreement between pltf.s., defts., & B. a cargo of Californian wheat was to be shipped for their joint account by the correspondents of B. at San Francisco, consigned to pltf.s. at Liverpool for sale upon certain special terms, the shippers to reimburse themselves for cost & insurance of the cargo by drafts on pltf.s. at sixty days' sight to the extent of 45s. per quarter, less freight, & for the balance of invoice amount by separate drafts at sixty days' sight upon each of the above parties for one-third of the excess. The cargo was shipped, & a bill was drawn by the San Francisco house for £29,353 on account of the invoice price of the wheat less freight, upon pltf.s., & was duly accepted & paid by them, together with freight, insurance & other charges in respect of the cargo; & the wheat on arrival was sold by pltf.s. at a loss. In Dec. 1883, B. became insolvent & compounded with their creditors for 30 per cent. of their liabilities, which composition pltf.s. received, leaving an unpaid balance of £1,760 due from that firm for their share of the loss on the adventure:—Held: the purchase & shipment of the wheat was a joint partnership adventure, each of the three firms to participate equally in the profit or loss, & defts., according to the rule of equity which since Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), is to prevail, were liable to contribute equally with pltf.s. to make good the default of B.—LOWE v. DIXON (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 455; 34 W. R. 441.

497. — Relief to surety — Misrepresentation by non-disclosure.]—Pltf.s. having in their employment a clerk whose duties involved the collecting of money, obtained from deft. a suretyship bond for securing the faithful discharge of his duties by the clerk. The clerk, to the knowledge of pltf.s. had previously been guilty of dishonesty in their service. Pltf.s. without any fraud on their part, omitted to disclose to deft. the fact of the clerk's previous dishonesty, & deft. had no knowledge of it. In an action to enforce the bond:—Held: the effect of this non-disclosure was to vitiate the contract & to release the surety.

As to what may have been the necessity at common law to prove fraud in cases like the present I express no opinion, because I am perfectly clear that in equity from early times it was quite unnecessary to prove fraud in the case of a material misrepresentation inducing a contract. I should add that now, since Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66), if there be any difference between the rules of common law & equity, the rule of equity prevails. Sureties have for many years been favoured in the eyes of equity, & various relief has been given to them from time to time founded on what has been called the clearest & most evident equity (FARWELL, L.J.).—*LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO., LTD. v. #### SUB-SECT. 3.—RECOGNITION OF EQUITABLE RIGHTS, REMEDIES AND DEFENCES.

498. Equity applied in King's Bench Court.]—

(1) The only case that takes a contract out of the Stat. Frauds is one of fraud, & the jurisdiction of the King's Bench Ct. is principally intended to prevent fraud & deceit. Where a party has given ground to another to think he had a title secured, the ct. will secure it to him (LORD BATHURST, C.).

(2) The King's Bench Ct. never alters the common law but in particular circumstances it extends relief, which the common law from its generality had not provided. But for fraud & circumvention there would have been at common law a relief similar to that which cts. of equity give, either by dissolving or affirming the contract as the conscience of the case requires; for at common law a man should not take advantage of his own wrong, & common law would have given the party injured by such contract damages at least, equity restores him to that state in which he would have been if no unfair practices had been used. Common law in many instances considers a fraudulent contract absolutely void except as against the author of the fraud, or those who knowingly contributed to it: but as against such persons valid, & equity in the King's Bench Ct. has peculiar means & rules for the purpose of this relief, & to guide the ct. in extending or withholding it (LORD BATHURST, C.).—POPHAM v. EYRE (1774), Lofft, 786; 98 E. R. 919.

499. Right to set aside deed.]—Where deft. in an action in one of the divisions of the High Ct. of Justice other than the Ch. Div. relies on an equity, to have a deed set aside as part of his defence, the division in which the action is may give effect to the equity so far as is incidental to the purposes of the defence. The lessor of certain lands knew that as to part of them he had no title to grant the lease. The lessee did not know, & had no means of knowing, that such was the case, & the lessor did not disclose the want of title to him:—Held: it was not necessary in equity, in order that the lessee might be relieved of the lease, that there should have been any affirmative fraud, & the concealment by the lessor of a fact affecting the title to a material part of the demised premises was a sufficient ground for treating the lease as set aside.

If deft. in an action in this division sets up facts in his answer which in the Ch. Div. would entitle him to have an instrument reformed or set aside, though this division cannot reform or set it aside with regard to its effect in future it may for the purpose of determining the action treat it as set aside (BRETT, J.).—*MOSTYN v. 502. Equitable principles applied in their entirety.]—STREEDS v. STREEDS, No. 86, ante.

503. Equitable defence to claim for possession of land.]—Under an agreement by the owners of land to grant leases of houses, when erected on such land by the intended lessees, the latter became entitled to a lease of two of such houses at a pepper-corn rent for a term of years. No lease of these houses was ever granted, but the intended lessees & their successors in title continued in possession during the term of years under such circumstances that a ct. of equity, if applied to, would have decreed specific performance of the agreement for a lease:—Held: during such term of years Stat. Limitations did not begin to run against the owners of the land, inasmuch as they had not an effective right of entry or action for the recovery of the land.

Common law & equity are both to be administered by the same ct. Therefore, although the ct. should come to the conclusion under such circumstances that at common law the trustees would have had a right to possession of the premises, it would not be bound to give judgment to that effect, if it saw that there was an equitable right to prevent that common law right from being enforced (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—WARREN v. MURRAY, [1894] 2 Q. B. 648; 64 L. J. Q. B. 42; 71 L. T. 458; 43 W. R. 3; 10 T. L. R. 573; 9 R. 793, C. A.

504. Legal & equitable rights not identical.]—Jud. Acts, 1873 (c. 66), 1875 (c. 77), have not abolished the distinction between legal & equitable interests, they merely enable the High Ct. to administer legal & equitable remedies, & therefore notwithstanding these statutes, the grant of future acquired chattels confers only an equitable interest therein upon the grantee, & if when they come into existence, but before the grantee takes possession thereof, the legal estate & interest therein, without notice of the grantee's existing equitable interest, become vested in another person, the latter is entitled to the future acquired chattels comprised in the grant, & becomes the owner thereof, both at law & in equity.

By a bill of sale a jeweller, for a valuable consideration, assigned to pltf. his after acquired stock in trade subject to a proviso for redemption; before pltf. took possession of the after acquired stock in trade, the jeweller pledged a portion of it with deft., who had no notice of pltf.'s bill of sale:—Held: (1) pltf. had an equitable title to the after acquired property, but the legal property was in the jeweller from whom deft. derived a legal interest which, in the absence of notice by deft. of the prior equity was to be preferred; (2) deft. was entitled to retain the stock in trade pledged with him as against pltf. & no action of detinue or conversion would lie.

It was not intended by the Legislature, & it has not been said that legal & equitable rights should be treated as identical but that the cts. should administer both legal & equitable principle (COTTON, L.J.).—*JOSEPH v. 508. In criminal matters—Affecting property.—Though the Ct. of Ch. has no jurisdiction to prevent the commission of acts which are merely criminal or illegal, yet its function is to protect property; & therefore it will restrain acts which are of a criminal nature, if they are also of such a nature as to injuriously affect rights of property.

Certain members of a Trades Union Assocn. employed at a spinning co.'s mill, took offence at a reduction of their wages & left their masters' service. The assocn. then posted in the district, & advertised in the local papers a placard or notice, which was in substance a warning to all workmen not to seek or renew their work at the mill until the dispute was settled. The co. filed a bill to restrain the printing & publishing of the notices, charging that they were part of a scheme to prevent persons by threats & intimidation, from hiring themselves to plffs. & that persons had, in fact, been so intimidated, that plff.'s business was materially injured thereby, the value of their goodwill depreciated, & the corpus of their property irreparably damaged. Upon demurrer for want of equity:—Held: the acts of intimidation complained of, though punishable as a statutable offence under the Masters & Workmen's Acts, were yet within the jurisdiction of equity, as tending to the destruction of property, & the bill would lie.—*SPRINGHEAD SPINNING CO. v. ## Part VI.—Priority.

SECT. 1.—LEGAL ESTATE GIVES PRIORITY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PURCHASER FOR VALUE WITHOUT NOTICE.

A. In General.

See, generally, Part II., Sect. 11, ante.

509. General rule.]—A subsequent title which is both legal & equitable destroys a prior title in equity only.

Where a legal estate & equity meet in the same person, they shall destroy a prior title which is only equitable. Where the inheritance of land mortgaged for a term is conveyed by a defeasible but equitable title, & afterwards conveyed to another by a legal & equitable title, the latter shall have the benefit of the equity of redemption (LORD PARKER, C.).—HAGSHAW v. YATES (1719), 1 Stra. 240; 93 E. R. 497.

510. —.]—(1) A third incumbrancer may, pendente lite, & before a decree gain a priority over the second by taking in the first. Such thing, however, is not allowed after a decree settling the priorities.

As to the equity of this ct., that a third incumbrancer having taken his security or mtge. without notice of the second incumbrance, & then being puisny, taking in the first incumbrance, shall squeeze out & have satisfaction before the second, that equity is certainly established in general. This has gone so far that if a puisny incumbrancer took in the first incumbrance pendente lite, still he should have the same benefit. The principle is this that a man's having notice of a second incumbrance at the time of taking in the first does not hurt; it is the very occasion that shows the necessity of it. It is only notice at the time of taking in the third that will affect him, for then no act he can do, will help him. Then a lis pendens is nothing but notice (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).

(2) The jurisdiction of law & equity is administered in this country in different cts. & creates different kind of rights in estates; & therefore as cts. of equity break in upon the common law, where necessity & conscience require it, still they allow superior force & strength to a legal title to estates; & where there is a legal title & equity on one side, this ct. never thought fit, that by reason of a prior equity against a man, who had a legal title, that man should be hurt, & this by reason of that force which this ct. necessarily & rightly allows to the common law & to legal titles (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—*WORTLEY v. 512. —.]—(1) The defence of purchase for value without notice may be sustained, although deft., in order to make out his title to the legal estate, must rely on an instrument which discloses the title of pltf., deft. not having had notice of such instrument at the time of his purchase.

(2) The trustees of a settlement advanced the trust money on the security of real property which was conveyed to them by the mtgor., the mortgage deed noticing the trust. The surviving trustee of the settlement afterwards reconveyed part of the property to the mtgor. on payment of part of the mortgage money, which he appropriated. The mtgor. then conveyed that part of the property to new mtgees., concealing, with the connivance of the trustee, both the prior mtge. & the reconveyance. When the fraud was discovered, the cestuis que trust under the settlement filed a bill against the new mtgees. claiming priority:—Held: the ct. would not interfere to take away the legal estate which passed to the new mtgees. under the reconveyance.

PART VI. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

509 I. General rule.]—It is a clear & well settled rule that equity will never deprive a purchaser for value without notice of any advantage he has, arising from either a legal or equitable title or even from mere possession.—MITCHELL v. GORRIE (1858), 6 Gr. 625.—CAN.

509 II. —.]—Whoever has the best right to call for the legal title, can avail himself of the plea of purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice.—MEDLICOTT v. O'DONEL (1809), 1 Ball & B. 156.—IR.

509 III. —.]—A purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice, is a defence as well against a legal as an equitable title.—JOYCE v. DE MOUNTAIN (1845), 2 Jo. & Lat. 374.—IR.

a deed by which the mortgaged property purported to be conveyed to the trustee as on a purchase by him, though no money in fact passed. The trustee then, concealing the prior mtg., & showing title under the pretended purchase deed, conveyed the property to a mtgee. without notice:—Held: the ct. would not interfere to take away the legal estate from the mtgee.

(4) A purchaser for value, who acquired a legal estate at a time when he had no actual notice of a prior equity, will not be held to have had constructive notice of that equity because it turns out afterwards that his title to the legal estate must be made out by means of a deed which on the face of it gives notice of the prior equity, that deed having been fraudulently suppressed at the time when he paid his money & took his conveyance.

An intentional fraud has been committed & the parties to it have been enabled to effect their purpose owing to the cestuis que trust allowing the trustee, originally one of three, to become the sole trustee. As sole trustee he necessarily had possession of the title deeds to the mortgaged estate; so that, by the reconveyance to the mtgor., the mtgor. became repossessed of the legal estate, & by keeping back the whole mortgage transaction, was enabled to show a complete legal title to the property. Had he disclosed the mtg. the mortgage deed would have put the parties dealing with him on inquiry; but as matters were conducted, the mtgee. acquired the legal estate, & entered into possession of the property without notice of the prior charge, & he must be entitled to hold it (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).

(5) I propose simply to apply myself to the case of a purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, obtaining, upon the occasion of his purchase, & by means of his purchase deed, some legal estate, some legal right, some legal advantage; & according to my view of the established law of this ct., such a purchaser's plea of a purchase for valuable consideration without notice is an absolute, unqualified, unanswerable defence, & an unanswerable plea to the jurisdiction of this ct. Such a purchaser, when he has once put in that plea, may be interrogated & tested to any extent as to the valuable consideration which he has given in order to show the bona fides or mala fides of his purchase, & also the presence or the absence of notice; but when once he has gone through that ordeal, & has satisfied the terms of the plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, then, according to my judgment, this ct. has no jurisdiction whatever to do anything more than to let him depart in possession of that legal estate, that legal right, that legal advantage which he has obtained, whatever it may be. In such a case a purchaser is entitled to hold that which, without breach of duty, he has had conveyed to him (JAMES, L.J.).—PILCHER v. RAWLINS (1872), 7 Ch. App. 259; *sub nom. PILCHER v. 524. ——— Partnership assets.]—The partnership deed of a banking business provided that the whole of the capital of the business as appearing in the private ledger of the bank belonged to the senior partner, T., & that on his death the surviving partners should have the option of purchasing his share of the business at its net value after providing for the liabilities of the business. The capital as appearing in the private ledger included the R. & S. estates, both freeholds; the legal estate of R. was in T. & the legal estate of S. was in T. & D. jointly, D. being a former partner. In 1908 T. died, & by his will appointed P. & F. (his partners) & R. his exors., & devised & bequeathed to them all his real & personal estate upon trust for sale & thereout to pay his debts & testamentary & funeral expenses, & to hold the net balance upon trust for F. At the death of T. the banking business was insolvent, its liabilities largely exceeded its assets, & he had no separate estate. The surviving partners concealed the insolvency of the bank by making false statements in their affidavit for probate of T.'s will, gave notice in Feb. 1909, to acquire the share of T., & continued to carry on the bank in the hope of restoring its solvency. By a deed dated Apr. 29, 1912, the three exors. of T., after reciting untruly that the debts of T. had been paid, conveyed as trustees to F. in fee simple the real estate of T., & by another deed dated Apr. 30, 1912, after untrue recitals to the effect that T. at his death was absolutely entitled to the S. estate, the outstanding legal estate in S. was conveyed by D. to F. in fee simple. F. then mortgaged the R. & S. estates for £25,000, which sum was applied the

In negotiating the mtge. the title was deduced through T. & his will, the partnership deed & the insolvency of the bank not being disclosed. In 1914 the continuing partners became bkpt., & at that date there were creditors of the bank who were creditors at the death of T. & were still unpaid. The trustee in bkpcy. sued the three exors. of T. & the mtgees., alleging that the R. & S. estates were part of the assets of the bank, that the deeds of Apr. 1912, were fraudulent & void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, & claiming priority over the mtgees. for the creditors of the bank:—Held: the legal estate in R. & S. passed by the deeds of Apr. 1912, & the mtgees., being entitled by the terms of those deeds to suppose the trusts of T.'s will were at an end, & having the legal estate & being purchasers for value without notice of the real facts, were unaffected by any antecedent equities of the creditors of the bank.—*PEARCE v. 535. —.]—(1) If a subsequent purchaser or mtgee. has notice of a former purchase or incumbrance, he shall not avail himself of an assignment of an old outstanding term, prior to both, in order to get a preference.

(2) If he had no notice of such prior purchase or incumbrance, & has the first & best right to call for the legal estate, then if he gets an assignment of it, a ct. of equity will not deprive him of his advantage.

(3) If a second mtgee. lend his money upon an estate upon which there is an old outstanding term, & has notice at the same time of a certain incumbrance, prior to his own, the prior incumbrancer has the best right to call for the legal estate, & to satisfy himself of any other incumbrances upon the estate, although such other incumbrances were not known to the second mtgee. at the time he advanced his money.

(4) What is the nature of a term attendant upon the inheritance? The attendance of terms for years upon the inheritance is the creature of a ct. of equity, invented partly to protect real property, & partly to keep it in the right channel. In order to do it, this ct. framed the distinction between such attendant terms, & terms in gross, notwithstanding that in the consideration of the common law they are both the same, & equally keep out the owner of the fee so long as they subsist. But as equity always considers who has the right in conscience to the land, & on that ground makes one man a trustee for another; & as the common law allows the possession of the tenant for years to be the possession of the owner of the freehold, this ct. said, where the tenant for years is but a trustee for the owner of the inheritance, he shall not keep out his cestui que trust, nor pari ratione, obstruct him in doing any acts of ownership, or in making any assurances of his estate; & therefore, in equity such a term of years shall yield, ply, & be moulded, according to the uses, estates, or charges, which the owner of the inheritance declares, or carves out of the fee. Thus the dominion of real property was kept entire. Though the law says that the term & the fee being in different persons, they are separate distinct estates, & the one not merged in the other, yet the beneficial & profitable interest of both being in the same person, equity will unite them for the sake of keeping the property entire. Therefore, if the owner of the inheritance levy a fine sur consueance de droit, or suffer a common recovery to uses, the trust of the term shall follow & be governed by those uses, although a term for years is not the subject of a fine sur consueance de droit, much less of a common recovery; nor would equity allow the trust of a term in gross to be settled with such limitations. This doctrine is always allowed to have its full effect as between the representatives, that is, the heir either in fee simple or fee tail, of the owner of the inheritance, & the exor., & all persons claiming as volunteers under him; though certain distinctions have been admitted as to creditors, which are not material to the present case. And in general the rule has been the same, whether the trust of the term be created by express declaration, or arise by construction & judgment of this ct.

What kind of grantee or owner of the inheritance is entitled in this ct. to the protection of such a term? Or, in other words, in whose hands such a term shall be allowed to protect the inheritance? In the first place, he must be a purchaser for a price paid or for a valuable consideration. He must be a purchaser bonae fidei, not affected with any fraud or collusion. He must be a purchaser without notice of the prior conveyance, or of the prior charge or incumbrance; for notice makes him come in fraudulently; & here, when I speak of a purchaser for a valuable consideration, I include a mtgee., for he is a purchaser pro tanto (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—WILLOUGHBY v. 552. —[1] Where a tenant is in possession of land, a purchaser is bound by all the equities which the tenant could enforce against the vendor. This equity of the tenant extends not only to interests connected with his tenancy, but also to interests under collateral agreements. C. having obtained the deeds from B., in whose custody they were deposited, made a second equitable mtge. of his moiety to S., who, at the time of taking his security, had no notice of the prior charge. 558. — Legal estate acquired pendente lite.]
—WORTLEY v. BIRKHEAD, No. 510, ante.

559. — — — — —.]—A person who has bond fide paid money without notice of any other title, may afterwards, even pendente lite, get a legal title if he can, & may hold it, though during the interval between the payment & the getting in of the legal title he may have had notice of some prior dealing inconsistent with the good faith of the dealing with himself.—BLACKWOOD v. LONDON CHARTERED BANK OF AUSTRALIA (1874), L. R. 5 P. C. 92; 43 L. J. P. C. 25; 30 L. T. 45; 22 W. R. 419, P. C.

560. — — — — —.]—J., the owner of four freehold houses, mortgaged them in fee for £1,500 each. The mtgees. transferred their mtge. to B. in consideration of the principal & interest then due, amounting to £1,579 1s. 5d. on each house. Two days afterwards B. sold the houses to H. for exactly the same sum as he paid for the transfer to himself, & conveyed them to H. in exercise of the power of sale in the mtges., freed from the equity of redemption. H. soon afterwards mortgaged the four houses for £6,000, & on her death her successor in title, E., sold the equity of redemption to L. for £2,500, subject to the prior mtge. for £6,000. Certain creditors of J., the original owner, who had recovered judgment in an action against him, & obtained equitable execution on his equity of redemption, brought an action against B. & E., impeaching the validity of the sale to H., & obtained judgment setting it aside as a fraudulent execution of the power of sale, & declaring plffs. entitled to a right of redemption. L. was not a party to the action, but on receiving notice of it he paid off the mtge. for £6,000, & took a conveyance of the legal estate from the mtgees. At the time when L. purchased the equity of redemption from E., he had no actual notice of any impropriety in the sale by B. to H., nor of any facts affecting the sale not disclosed by the deeds, except that he had seen a valuation which appeared to show that the purchase by H. was at an undervalue, nor did he make any inquiries concerning the circumstances of the sale:—Held: L. was not affected by constructive notice of the impropriety of the sale, & he was protected against the prior equitable interest of plffs. by his acquisition of the legal estate.

The maxim qui prior est tempore potior est jure is in plffs.' favour, & it seems strange that they should, without any default of their own, lose a security which they once possessed. But the above maxim is, in our law, subject to an important qualification, that, where equities are equal, the legal title prevails. Equality, here, does not mean or refer to priority in point of time, as is shown by the cases on tacking. Equality means the non-existence of any circumstance which affects the conduct of one of the rival claimants, & makes it less meritorious than that of the other. Equitable owners who are upon an equality in this respect may struggle for the legal estate, & he who obtains it, having both law & equity on his side, is in a better situation than he who has equity only (LINDLEY, L.J.).

The doctrine applies in favour of all equitable owners or incumbrancers for value without notice of prior equitable interests, who get in the legal estate from persons who commit no breach of trust in parting with it to them. It is true that the doctrine does not apply to an equitable owner or incumbrancer who gets in the legal estate from a trustee who commits a breach of trust in conveying it to him—at all events, if such breach of trust is known to the person who gets in the estate, & perhaps, even if he does not know of it (LINDLEY, L.J.).—BAILEY v. BARNES, [1894] 1 Ch. 25; 63 L. J. Ch. 73; 69 L. T. 542; 42 W. R. 66; 38 Sol. Jo. 9; 7 R. 9, C. A.

561. — Legal estate must not be obtained in breach of trust.]—A purchaser or mtgee. shall not protect himself by taking a conveyance from a trustee after notice of the trust, for by taking such conveyance he becomes the trustee himself.

Though a purchaser may buy in an incumbrance or lay hold on any plank to protect himself, yet he shall not protect himself by taking a conveyance from a trustee after he had notice of the trust, for by taking a conveyance with notice of the trust, he himself becomes the trustee, & must not, to get a plank to protect himself, be guilty of a breach of trust (per CUR.).—SAUNDERS v. S. applied some of the money in payment of M.'s debts, & paid some into his own bank, but did not pay anything to P. To keep H. quiet, he handed him a surrender & admittance of M. obtained since the mtge. Subsequently, S. obtained a transfer to himself of P.'s mtge., & a further charge to himself on M.'s equity of redemption for £350 on giving P. a cheque for his mtge. moneys & costs. Before the cheque was cashed S. took the deeds, except those handed to H., to the bank on which the cheques were drawn, & persuaded the bankers to honour the cheque on his depositing the deeds. The cheque was afterwards honoured, & part of the proceeds applied in paying off P.'s mtge. After an action by H. for a declaration of his right to priority over the bankers, the bankers procured P. to be admitted to the copyholds, took a surrender from him, & on such surrender got themselves admitted:—Held: H. was entitled to priority over the bankers, & the possession of the legal estate could not avail the bankers, for, if P. knew for what purpose H.'s money was advanced, he was guilty of a breach of trust by conveying to someone else.

P. out of his own money, paid off the debt due on the first mtge. on the property, & also the debt due on the third mtge., & took transfers to himself of those mtges., & got in the legal estate in the property comprised in them. He claimed to be entitled to tack the third mtge. to the first, & so obtain priority for the third over the second. P., at the date when he paid off the debts had notice of the second mtge., but the third mtgee. had no notice of it at the date when the third mtge. was created, & no notice of the second mtge. had been given to the first mtgee.:—Held: as a general rule, a purchaser for value without notice could for valuable consideration assign to another who had notice the benefit of his position, but a mtgor. could not by taking an assignment from a purchaser for value squeeze out one of his own incumbrancers, & under the deed of 1882, P. was trustee for L. & must in his dealings with L.'s mtgees. be taken to be acting in his behalf, & could not prejudice or defeat the rights of L.'s mtgees. any more than L. himself could.—*LEDDBROOK v. 568. ———.]—Voluntary conveyance of legal estate.—Land was devised to the S. trustees in strict settlement, the trustees who were devisees to uses, having powers of sale & mtge., & as incidental thereto power to revoke the uses declared by the will. The trustees made a legal mtge. of the land with other property & afterwards sold the land to T. without notice of the mtge., which appeared to have been forgotten, & handed the title deeds to him. T. showing a forged title mortgaged the land to pltf., who believed they thereby acquired a good legal mtge., & handed the forged title deeds to them. T. then made another mtge. showing the true title to deft., who also thought he had a legal mtge., & handed the genuine title deeds to him. Neither pltf. nor defts. had at the date of their respective mtges. any notice of the prior legal mtge. & deft. had no notice of pltf.'s mtge. Afterwards deft. discovered the existence of pltf.'s mtge. & of the prior legal mtge., & thereupon, induced the legal mtgee. to release the land from their mtge., the remaining property being sufficient for their security, & to reconvey the legal estate by a voluntary deed to the S. trustees on the express condition that the latter should immediately thereafter convey the legal estate to deft. This the S. trustees accordingly did, having at the time notice of pltf.'s mtge. Pltf. brought an action as first equitable mtgees. to establish their priority over the second equitable mtgee.:—Held: (1) there was nothing to show that the second equitable mtgee. had acted inequitably in getting in the legal estate; (2) there was no equity which prevented him from availing himself of its protection, & he was entitled to priority over the first equitable mtgee.—*TAYLOR v. under the will to pltf.'s predecessors in title, who gave notice of the mtge. to K.'s co-trustees. In 1905 this mtge. became vested in pltf. In 1879 K. was the sole surviving trustee of the will, & in 1890 executed a memorandum of charge in favour of defts. the W. & D. Bank, to secure a overdraft, & at the same time deposited with the bank as security the deeds of T. Villa & the probate of the will. In 1903 K. conveyed T. Villa to the bank by way of mtge. to secure the existing debt & further advances. The bank at the time of taking the securities of 1890 & 1903 made no proper investigation of the title, & did not discover that pltf. had a prior equitable security. In 1890 all the trusts of the will had been satisfied except a legacy of £100 bequeathed to a tenant for life who was then alive, & was still living at the date of the action. In an action to determine the priorities of the mtgees.:—Held: (1) the trustees of the will, after notice was given to them of the security of 1872, became express trustees for pltf. & his predecessors in title quoad the interest assigned; (2) in 1903 K.'s equitable beneficial interest had not merged in his legal estate as trusts of the will were then outstanding; (3) the bank had actual & constructive notice that K. had acquired the legal estate only by reason of his surviving his co-trustees, & therefore, had notice of the trusts of the will, including any created by assignment, & incumbrances of beneficial interests of which notice had been given to the trustees; (4) since they had notice of the trusts of the will, they took the property in 1903 subject to all equities to which such property was subject in the hands of the trustees; (5) the delivery to the bank of the deeds in 1903 by K. was a breach of trust, & the possession of the legal estate by the bank, obtained by them by such breach of trust on the part of K. did not entitle them to priority over pltf.'s prior equitable mtge.—*PERHAM v. 578. Before conveyance executed—Though after money paid.—(1) E. devised to his second son T., & his heirs, certain lands, upon condition to pay to his grandchildren, the children of the said T., £90, to be equally divided amongst them, & on default of payment, then that they might enter, hold, & enjoy the premises. T. died in testator's lifetime; the son of the eldest son of testator entered on the lands as heir-at-law, & sold them:—Held: the legacy to the children of T. is a continuing charge on the lands in the hands of the purchaser, & they are entitled to be satisfied for the same with interest by sale of the lands.

Some months afterwards the husband & his son by a former marriage barred the entail of the estates; & by another deed, & by another instrument, they conveyed the estates to trustees for the purpose of raising a sum of money to pay off incumbrances, with power to the husband to dispose of the residue as he should think fit; & after several limitations in favour of the father & son, there was contained a power to the father to jointure his then present or any future wife, provided it did not exceed £1,500 a year. The solr. of the father acted for both father & son, having prepared the articles of separation, & what took place was suggested by the solr. :—Held: the son had good notice of the articles, notwithstanding he had by his answers denied all knowledge of them, & the estates being equitable. 595. —.]—In 1882 T., a solr., advanced money of his own upon the security of leaseholds mortgaged to him by sub-demise. In 1899, being then one of the two trustees of the B. settlement, he received a sum of money belonging to the settlement &, without the knowledge of his co-trustees, fraudulently applied it to his own use. By entries in his books, under the heading of the trust, he purported to appropriate his own mtge. debt to answer the sum of which he had defrauded the trust estate, but he never communicated the purported appropriation either to his co-trustees or to his cestuis que trust, all of whom were sui juris. In 1896 the appropriation became known to one of the cestuis que trust, who was a solr. & acted as such for the others, but although they had all become absolutely entitled in possession to the trust funds they never called upon the trustees to transfer them, & no inquiry was made respecting the mtge. In 1899 T. was also a trustee of the T. settlement. In 1895, T. having then become sole trustee of that settlement, N. was appointed co-trustee, & at N.'s request on T.'s representation that the trust funds included the above-mentioned mtge. debt, & securities, the representation being supported by his production to N. of the deeds, T. executed a legal transfer into the joint names of himself & N., N. being then totally ignorant of the existence of the B. settlement & of T.'s secret appropriation thereto. The deed of transfer had been prepared by T. as solr. of the T. trust & the mtge. & other title-deeds remained in his custody as such solr. In 1897, T., without N.'s knowledge, deposited the deeds with his bankers as security for a debt due from him to them, at the same time executing to them a deed-poll by which he charged the debt upon all his estate & interest in the property comprised in the deeds, & undertook to execute on request a legal mtge.; & he thereby declared that during the continuance of the security he would hold all his interest thereby charged in trust for the bank as mtgees.; & he appointed three officers of the bank his attorneys for him & on his behalf, & as his act & deed, to execute any such legal mtge. as aforesaid. At that time the bank had no notice of either of the two settlements. In Mar. 1898, T., absconded, & in Apr. 1898, notice was given to the bank of the T. settlement, but they had no notice of the B. settlement. Notwithstanding the notice, the bank purported to execute to themselves by their three officers, as T.'s attorneys under the deed-poll a legal mtge. of the leaseholds comprised in the deposited deeds. In actions to ascertain the priorities of the B. settlement the T. settlement & the bank to the benefit of the mtge. debt & securities :—Held : (1) there was a good appropriation in 1889 in favour of the B. settlement, though not communicated by T. either to his co-trustee or to his cestuis que trust; (2) assuming there was a good appropriation in favour of the B. settlement, N., as trustee of the T. settlement, & having no notice of the appropriation, could not be deprived of the advantage acquired by him as against the B. settlement by the possession of the legal estate in one moiety of the mtge. debt & securities, & of the better right to the legal estate in the other moiety which had become vested in the bank through T.'s mtge. to them operating as a severance of the joint tenancy between himself & N.; & N. must be treated as an innocent purchaser for value without notice, on the ground that by accepting the transfer of the mtge. debt & securities he gave up his right to sue T. for the debt due to the T. settlement; (3) so N. was protected by Conveyancing Act, 1882 (c. 39), s. 3 (1) & (2), from being affected with constructive notice of the appropriation to the B. settlement because (a) no possible inquiries or inspection by N., or any independent solicitor on his behalf, would have brought the appropriation to the B. settlement to his knowledge, & (b) the appropriation did not "come to the knowledge of" T. either as N.'s solr. or "in the same transaction in respect to which the question of notice arose; (4) inasmuch as the bank had, at the date of the mtge. to them in Apr. 1898, notice of the T. settlement they could not be allowed to gain priority over that settlement by means of the legal estate they had acquired in an undivided moiety of T.'s mtge. debt, & securities, their mtge. not relating back to the date of the deed-poll of 1897. Consequently; (5) N. as trustee to the T. settlement, was entitled to the mtge. debt & securities in priority to both the B. settlement & the bank, & the bank was ordered to reconvey to him as such trustee the legal estate vested in them, & to deliver up the deeds accordingly.

(6) Although a mtge. debt is a chose in action, yet, where the subject of the security is land, the mtges. is treated as having "an interest in land," & priorities are governed by the rules applicable to interests in land, & not by the rules which apply to interests in personality; & leaseholds are real estate for the purposes of the rule.

(7) Qu.: whether, when the estates of a prior & subsequent incumbrancer are both equitable, the rules as to postponements are not excluded.

(8) I next proceed to consider the order of priority between the purely equitable titles. This is governed by order of time—unless there has been some act or omission on the part of the owner of an equitable title prior in point of time such as to cause that title to be postponed to a subsequent equitable interest (STIRLING, L.J.).

(9) A purchaser for value without notice is entitled to the benefit of a legal title, not merely where he has actually got it in, but where he has a better title or right to call for it. If a purchaser for value takes an equitable title only or omits to get in an outstanding legal estate & a subsequent purchaser for value without notice procures at the time of his purchase the person in whom the legal title is vested to declare himself a trustee for him or even to join as party in a conveyance of the equitable interest (although he may not formally convey or declare a trust of the legal estate) still the subsequent purchaser gains priority (STIRLING, L.J.).

(10) The appropriation although perfectly well known to T. did not come to his knowledge as N.'s solr. nor in the same transaction in respect to which the question of notice arises (STIRLING, L.J.).

Until the purchase the co. was to be a mere bailee of the machinery, & in case of default in making the monthly payments or breach of the conditions of the agreement L. & H. were empowered to enter & remove the machinery. Subsequently the co. gave to a bank an equitable mtgce. of the business premises by a deposit of the deeds thereof, accompanied by a written charge under the common seal of the co. containing an agreement to give a legal mtgce. on demand. The bank took without notice of the hire-purchase agreement. The co. failed to pay the instalments & committed breaches of the conditions of the hire-purchase agreement; L. & H. demanded delivery up of the machinery, & a winding-up order was made against the co. 597. ——By an agreement in writing, dated Nov. 11, 1910, G. M. & Co., Ltd., agreed to supply & erect upon the works owned by the firm of M., J. & Co. (the predecessors of deft. co.) a complete installation of a patent automatic sprinkler for the protection of the premises from fire, at the price of £237, payable by annual instalments. In the event of default being made in any annual instalment, or of any breach of the agreement by the purchasers, the whole unpaid balance of principal & interest was immediately to become due. The agreement further provided that the basis of the contract was that the sprinkler installation remained the sole & exclusive property of the contractors until the whole sum of £237 had been paid, & in the event of default the contractors might enter upon the premises & remove the installation. Deft. co. was incorporated in 1911 & took over the assets & liabilities of the firm of M., J. & Co., including their interest under the agreement. In Dec. 1911, deft. co. issued a series of first mtgce. debentures containing a charge in the usual form on the undertaking, such charge to be a floating security. On Oct. 18, 1912, a receiver & manager was appointed in an action brought by the debenture-holders to enforce their security. On Oct. 21, the last instalment under the agreement fell due & was not paid. The debenture-holders had no notice of the agreement. On an application by G. M. & Co., Ltd., for liberty to enter upon deft. co.'s premises & remove therefrom the sprinkler installation:—Held: (1) the effect of the hire-purchase agreement was to confer upon appcts. an interest in the land to which the sprinkler installation was affixed & to authorise them, in the events which had happened, to enter & remove it; (2) the interest of the debenture-holders being also equitable the ordinary principles of priorities applied; (3) the interest being subsequent in date was therefore postponed to the interest of appcts.—*Re MORRISON, JONES & TAYLOR, LTD., COOKES v. 599. General rule.—A purchaser without notice shall not be hurt in equity, not only where he has got in a prior legal title, but where he has a better right to call for the legal estate, than another who has got an incumbrance prior to his title.

I take it to be the rule in equity that where a man is a purchaser without notice, he shall not be annoyed in equity not only where he has a prior legal title, but where he has a better right to call for the legal estate than the other (LORD COWPER, C.)—*WILKES v. 601. Who has best right—Cestui que trust.]—

(1) Though stale accounts are discouraged, yet an administratrix who was to see to the execution of a trust out of real estate, & was accountable for the amount, was not allowed to take any advantage from the length of time elapsed:—Held: she ought to have seen the trust executed.

(2) Where all claim in equity, qui prior tempore potior jure: except where one has better right to call for the legal estate. All these parties in both mtges. are all incumbrances in, & claim only an equity, the legal estate certainly standing out in the trustee. Then the rule in equity is, qui prior tempore, potior jure, & as all defts. as well as plffs. have but an equity, that general rule must prevail, with this distinction, that it holds only, where none of the parties have a better right to call for the legal estate than the others. Now in the present case, which of these parties, all claiming for valuable consideration, has the best right to call for the legal estate out of the heir of the surviving trustee? Plainly Lady Pomfret, for they are trustees for her (HARDWICKE, C.).

(3) Purchasers for valuable consideration are not bound by private Act of Parliament.

It was material to see certain fines said to be levied, because whosoever claimed as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, were not bound by recital in the Act of Parliament (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—POMFRET (EARL) v. WINDSOR (LORD) (1752), 2 Ves. Sen. 472; 28 E. R. 302, L. C.

611. — Omission by mortgagee—After knowledge of default by mortgagor.]—A co. held land under a building agreement from the Corp'n. of London, under which separate leases of the houses were to be granted as they were built. In Apr. 1883, the co. borrowed money from pl'tfs., & covenanted to mtge. the houses to them by demise when the leases were granted, & that in the meantime the premises comprised in the building agreement should be a security to pl'tfs. The building agreement was handed over to pl'tfs., but no notice of their security was given to the Corp'n. of London. In Feb. 1886, leases of two of the houses were granted to the co., & immediately afterwards the co. deposited them by way of equitable mtge. with B., J. & Co., who had no notice of pl'tfs.' security:—Held: although the giving notice to the corp'n. would probably have prevented the handing over the leases to the co., still, as notice is not requisite to complete a security on real estate, the omission to give such notice was not a neglect of duty by pl'tfs. on the ground of which they ought to be postponed to the subsequent equitable incumbrancers.

The cases where a prior equitable mtgee. has been postponed on the ground of negligence are cases where he has taken no steps although he knew that the mtgor. had made default in performing his obligations, & his omission to take such steps has enabled the mtgor. to commit a fraud; but no case decides that he is to be postponed because he has not taken precautions against a future default by a mtgor. who has not yet, to the knowledge of the mtgee., been guilty of default (Fry, L.J.).—*UNION BANK OF LONDON v. 612. — Act or omission by trustee—Neglect to inquire after title deeds.]—In Nov. 1875, a husband deposited with his bankers, the title deeds of some leasehold houses, together with a memorandum of deposit, as a continuing security to the bankers for any overdraft of his wife's current account with them. In Nov. 1876, he died, having bequeathed all his property to his wife, & appointed her his extrix. After his death the deeds remained with the bankers, & the widow was allowed on the security of them to overdraw her account. In May, 1877, she married again. Prior to the marriage the houses were assigned by her to a trustee on trust for herself for life, & after her death on trust for an infant son of her first marriage absolutely. Power was given to the trustee to sell the houses during the life of the wife, at her request, & after her death at the discretion of the trustee. The trustee made no inquiry about the title deeds, & no notice of the settlement was given to the bankers. In June, 1877, the husband & wife gave notice to the bankers of their marriage, & at their request a balance, which then stood to the credit of the wife's current account, was transferred to a new current account opened by the bankers with the husband. The deeds remained with the bankers, but no notice of the settlement was given to them. In Nov. 1877, at the request of the bankers, the probate of the first husband's will was sent to them, & at their request a new memorandum of deposit was in Jan. 1878, signed by the husband & wife, making the deeds a continuing security to the bankers for any overdraft of the husband's current account. In Apr. 1878, the wife died. The deeds were still with the bankers, & at that time the husband's current account was in credit. In 1883 the trustee made some inquiries, & then discovered that the deeds, which he had believed to be in the custody of the solr. who had prepared the settlement, were with the bankers. He then gave the bankers notice of the settlement, & claimed the deeds. This was the first notice that the bankers had had of the settlement:—Held: the omission of the trustee to inquire for the title deeds was negligence of such a character as prevented him from availing himself of the legal estate to give him priority over the equitable charge of the bankers, & the cestui que trust stood in no better position.—*LLOYD'S BANKING CO. v. 613. — — — — —.]—By his marriage settlement W. conveyed real estate to trustees to be held upon trusts under which he took a life interest determinable on alienation, & subject to that & to a discretionary trust in the event of his interest determining in his lifetime, his wife was entitled for her life. The same solrs. acted for all parties. They had in their possession a bundle of deeds purporting to be the title deeds of the property, & were not aware that W. still retained the deed by which the property was conveyed.

Some years after the marriage W. mortgaged the property & handed over the conveyance to the mtgee., who afterwards sold the property. Neither the mtgee. nor the purchaser from him had any notice of the settlement. W. absconded, & his wife brought an action against the purchaser, the trustees, & her husband for a declaration that W.'s life interest had determined & that the purchaser's interest in the property was subject to her interest under the settlement:—Held: the trustees had been guilty of negligence, & their legal estate must be postponed to the subsequent equitable interest of the purchaser from the mtgee.; & pl'tf. was in no better position than her trustees.—*WALKER v. (3) Notice should be in the same transaction. This rule ought to be adhered to, otherwise it would make purchasers' & mtgees.' titles depend altogether on the memory of their counsellors & agents, & oblige them to apply to persons of less eminence as counsel, as not being so likely to have notice of former transactions (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—WARRICK v. 621. — Extent of rule.]—(1) J., after creating an equitable charge on his estate in favour of C., entered into an agreement for the sale of the same estate to B. In Mar. 1832, plffs., as assignees of C.'s interest in that charge, gave notice in writing to F. & Co., the solrs. of B., of their interest in the estate. The sale to B. was delayed by objections to the title, & the disputes were continued to 1837, when J. died. In the same year B. took a conveyance of the estate from the devisee of J., upon the same abstract of title the objections being waived in consideration of an abatement in the price. From 1831 to the completion of the purchase, F. acted as the solr. of B. in all the transactions. Plffs. then filed their bill as equitable mtgees. against B. as a purchaser, with notice; the notice of 1832 was produced out of B.'s possession:—Held: B. at the time of his purchase was affected with the notice of plffs.' interest given to F. in 1832, & the usual decree would be made as in the case of an equitable mtge.

In 1878 resps., as first mtgees., sold the property under their power of sale, employing S., who was also the mtgor.'s solr., to conduct the sale. S. received the sale moneys, & after satisfying resps.' mtge., kept the balance for himself instead of paying off the second mtgee. S. did not inform the second mtgee. of the sale but—acting as the mtgor.'s solr.—continued to pay him interest on the second mtge. as if it were still subsisting. Until 1892 resps. either did not know that there was a second mtge. or believed a false representation made to them by S. that he had the authority of the second mtgee. to receive the balance. In 1892 the second mtgee. discovered the fraud & brought an action against resps. for an account & payment of the amount due to him:—Held: (1) the action was barred by Stat. Limitations & Trustee Act, 1888 (c. 59), s. 8, & the case did not fall within either of the exceptions mentioned in sect. 8; (2) resps. were not "party or privy" to the fraud of S., & the trust moneys were not "still retained" by them, the moneys not being in their hands or under their control when the action was brought; (3) in committing & concealing the fraud, S. was not acting as resps.' agent, & there was nothing to prevent Stat. The mtgee. acted throughout the transactions as solr. for all parties, but he did not disclose the existence of the bankers' mtge. either to the mtgor. or to S. :—Held: S. was affected with constructive notice of the bank's mtge., & therefore, the bank was entitled to priority over S., but the mtgor. had not through his solr. notice of the bank's mtge.

It is well settled that a purchaser, in which term I must be understood to include a mtgee. or a transferee of a mtge. of land will be deemed to have notice of all facts, which he would have learned upon a proper investigation of the title, under a contract containing no restriction of his rights in that respect (JOYCE, J.).

A person who ought, according to the rule of cts. of equity, either personally or by his agent to have known a fact is treated in equity as if he actually knew it, & he cannot escape the consequences of this constructive notice by employing the dishonest solr. of the other party with whom he is dealing, if the true facts would have come, or ought to have come, to the knowledge of an independent solr. in case such a solr. had been employed (JOYCE, J.).—*BERWICK & Co. v. The title deeds & mtge. deed were placed in the hands of R., the mtgee.'s solr., who, in that character, retained possession of the deeds, & received the interest on the mtge. debt down to 1840. In 1838, Mr. E., Mrs. E., & J. were the acting exors. & exrix. of one O., deceased, & employed R. as solr. to their testator's estate, & allowed him to receive & retain in his hands £500, part of that estate. In July, 1838, Mr. E. died, & in July, 1839, Mrs. E. also died, leaving J. the sole surviving exor. of O. In 1840, J., through the medium of D., another solr., pressed R. for security for the £500 in his hands. R., thereupon, represented to H. that the original mtgee. required repayment of his mtge. debt, & having procured H. to execute to J. a deed, which he, R., represented to him, H., to be a transfer of the original mtge. debt & security, but which, in fact, was a new mtge., delivered the same, together with the title deeds, except the original mtge. deed, to J. R. subsequently became insolvent, & absconded. D., the solr. employed by J. to obtain from R. security for the £500 arranged with him that he should prepare the mtge. deed on behalf of J., precisely the same as if he, D., were not acting in the matter for that gentleman, but that he D. should have the draft of the mtge. security submitted to him, & should be allowed to inspect the title deeds. On a bill filed by the original mtgee. to foreclose, & to have the title deeds delivered up to him:—Held: the usual decree for foreclosure would be made, giving J. the first right to redeem, but, a case of constructive notice not being established against J., he would not be ordered to deliver up the title deeds.—KENDALL v. HULLS (1847), 9 L. T. O. S. 410; 11 Jur. 864.

No memorial of the deed was inrolled under 53 Geo. 3, c. 141. The estates produced about £400 a year, & T.'s moiety was already mortgaged to secure £1,000, with interest at 5 per cent., so that the annual value of the moiety over & above the interest was about £150 per annum. W., one of the mtgees., acted as the solr. of all parties in the preparation of the annuity deed:—Held: (1) T., although he had not actually joined in the grant of the annuity itself, was a grantor within the equitable construction of 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, s. 10, which dispensed in certain cases with inrolment of a memorial; (2) although for the purposes of that clause, the annuity granted must be taken to be of the larger amount, yet W. must be regarded as having wilfully suppressed the prior incumbrance, & the grantee could not, therefore, be affected with constructive notice thereof through W., & consequently, the annual value of the lands, excluding interest on incumbrances of which the grantee had notice, was greater than the annuity, & the clause dispensing with inrolment of a memorial applied.—*THOMPSON v. The settlement contained no power to mortgage the property. The house required repairs, & one, S., a solr., arranged with pltf., who were clients of his, for an advance on the security of the house. 645. For all defendants in same matter—Whether notice as between defendants.—Under a deed of assignment & transfer of mtge. dated in Dec. 1852, pltf. became the absolute mtgee. of four leasehold houses, the equity of redemption being vested in D., who was pltf.'s solr. In Apr. 1856, D. wrote to pltf., asking him to come to his office & sign leases of the four houses, as he thought was a good time to put up the property for sale. Pltf. accordingly called at the office of D., & there executed, without examination, four deeds, which D. represented, & pltf. believed, to be leases of the four houses at a rack rent. In Aug. 1858, D. absconded, & was made bkpt. Pltf. then discovered that the four deeds which he had signed were made between himself of the first part, D. of the second part, & one J., therein described as of 10, Canonbury Place, spinster, of the third part. Each of them witnessed that, in consideration of £1,000 paid by J. to D. with the consent of pltf., as the purchase-money for the premises, pltf. demised & D. demised & confirmed one of the four houses to J., her exors., etc., for a term of years, being the whole of the original term less one year. It turned out that 10, Canonbury Place was D.'s private residence, that J. was his nursemaid, & that no consideration money was paid to pltf. by her, or by any one. In the meantime three deeds, purporting to be mtges., had been executed. By one of them, executed in Dec. 1856, to which J., still described as of 10, Canonbury Place, D. & one of defts., N., were parties, reciting two of the said indentures of Apr. 1856, two of the houses were in consideration of £1,300 paid by deft. N. assigned by J. to deft. N. by way of mtge., to secure the repayment of £1,300 & interest, with a joint & several covenant for payment by J. & D. Two similar mtges., to which D. was not a party, each reciting one of the deeds of Apr. 1856, were effected by way of demise of the remaining two houses by J. to two other defts. The mtge. moneys were paid to D., as agents for J. Afterwards, by a deed of Apr. 1858, made between J. & D., reciting that J. was a trustee only for D., all the interest of J. under the deeds of Apr. 1856, was assigned to D. Pltf. filed the bill to have the deeds of Apr. 1856, set aside as fraudulent & void. Defts. claimed to hold the property as securities for the sums advanced by them:—Held: (1) the deeds of Apr. 1856, were wholly void, & must be delivered up to be cancelled; (2) both parties being the victims of fraud, the occasion of defts.' being imposed upon, namely, when they were advancing money, required extraordinary caution, but otherwise as to pltf.; (3) the employment by all defts. of the same solr., & the way in which they conducted the transaction, exposed them to the consequences of notice communicated through him; (4) by the been made in the payment of interest, the land was sold by the registrar of the supreme ct., & bought in by B.'s exors. Upon the refusal by the District Land Registrar to allow the land to be brought under provisions of Land Transfer Act:—Held: there was no ground for imputing to B., either directly, or constructively through his solr., knowledge of the circumstances attending the sale of the land by W. to his wife.—Re BYGUM (1896), 13 N. Z. L. R. 270.—N.Z.

The loan was negotiated by one of the persons who was a director of both cos., & the solr. who acted for both cos. prepared the mtge. A. SECT. 3.—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See Conveyancing Act, 1882 (c. 39), s. 3.

648. Nature of doctrine—Presumption of notice.]—(1) Title deeds were deposited as a security for money; deft., a creditor of the mtgor., fearing his immediate insolvency, took a conveyance of the same premises, without notice of the incumbrance:—Held: the conveyance was good.

(2) It is now fully settled, that a deposit of title deeds as a security for a debt, does amount to an equitable mtge. If pltf. can prove actual or constructive notice of the deposit in deft., it raises a trust in him to the amount of that equitable mtge. (EYRE, C.B.).

(3) Constructive notice I take to be in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumptions of which are so violent that the ct. will not allow even of its being controverted. Thus, if a mtgee. has a deed put into his hands which recites another deed which shows a title in some other person, the ct. will presume him to have notice, & will not permit any evidence to disprove it (EYRE, C.B.).—PLUMB v. FLUITT (1791), 2 Anst. 432; 145 E. R. 926.

649. ———.]—(1) The circumstances of a mtgor. being a solr., & preparing the mtge. deed, & of the mtgee. employing no other solr., are not sufficient to constitute the former the solr. of the latter, so as to affect him with notice of an incumbrance known to the solr.

(2) Notice to a solr. is actual notice to his client.

(3) Where a bond fide inquiry is made for title deeds on a mtge. or purchase, & a reasonable excuse is made for their not being forthcoming, their absence does not affect the purchaser or mtgee. with constructive notice of an incumbrance created by the deposit of them.

(4) Constructive notice, properly so called, is the knowledge which the cts. impute to a person upon a presumption so strong of the existence of the knowledge, that it cannot be allowed to be rebutted, either from his knowing something which ought to have put him upon further inquiry, or from his wilfully abstaining from inquiry, to avoid notice. I should therefore prefer calling the knowledge which a person has, either by himself or through his agent, actual knowledge; or if it is necessary to make a distinction between the knowledge which a person possesses himself, & that which is known to his agent, the latter might be called imputed knowledge (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).—ESPIN v. PEMBERTON (1859), 3 De G. & J. 547; 28 L. J. Ch. 311; 32 L. T. O. S. 345; 5 Jur. N. S. 157; 7 W. R. 221; 44 E. R. 1380, L. C.

651. ———.]—Testatrix, who died in 1871, by her will devised real estate in Middlesex to trustees upon trust for sale. The will was not registered in Middlesex. The heir-at-law of testatrix having learned that the will had not been registered, mortgaged the property to different mtgees., & registered the mtges. The mtge. deeds were prepared & registered by the heir-at-law himself. The surviving trustee received the rents of the property down to 1878, when he died; & in 1879, a receiver was appointed in an action to administer the estate of testatrix. The property was sold in 1882 under an order of the ct., & notice of the mtges. was then given by the mtgees. to the purchasers, & the purchase moneys were paid into ct., subject to the claims of the mtgees. The heir-at-law died in 1885. An application was made to transfer the purchase moneys to the account of the devisees under the will. The mtgees. resisted the application on the ground that Middlesex Registry Act, 1708 (c. 20), gave them a title, because the will had not been registered. Neither of the securities was for moneys advanced, but both for old debts, & the heir-at-law acted in the mtge. transactions as agent of both the mtgees.:—Held: if persons claiming under the Act had notice of the will, they could not set up the title of the heir-at-law; in the present case the mtgees. were affected by the notice which their agent the heir-at-law possessed; & consequently their claims failed.—*Re WEIR, HOLLINGWORTH v. 653. Doctrine not to be extended.—(1) The land tax upon certain real estates was redeemed by trustees for an infant tenant in tail, who were not his guardians, out of his personal estate. After the death of the infant, by a decree of the ct. against the then tenant for life & all successive remaindermen, annuities were charged upon the real estate in favour of the personalty. In pursuance of this decree, indentures were executed by the tenant for life & one remainderman, but no recovery was ever suffered. A subsequent tenant in tail barred the estate tail, & in 1835 sold the property to a purchaser for value. The annuities were regularly paid, & after 1835 were continued by the vendor himself up to his death in 1848. No express notice of the annuities was given to the purchaser, but the abstract disclosed that the land tax was redeemed by trustees acting as guardians of an infant who died under 21:—Held: this was not sufficient constructive notice to a purchaser to put him on his inquiry, & under the circumstances, the annuity was not a subsisting charge upon the land.

(2) It is highly inexpedient to extend the doctrine of constructive notice so as to attempt to make it apply to cases to which it has not hitherto been held applicable.

(3) Where a person has actual notice there can be no danger of doing injustice, because he is held to be bound by all the consequences of that which he knows to exist; but when he has not actual notice, he ought not to be treated as if he had notice, unless the circumstances are such as to enable the ct. to say that, not only he might have acquired, but also that he ought to have acquired the notice with which it is sought to affect him, & which he would have acquired, but for his own gross negligence, in the conduct of the business in question.

(4) The question by which it is sought to affect a purchaser with constructive notice, is not whether he had the means of obtaining & might by prudent caution have obtained knowledge, but whether

654. ——G., the tenant for life of the R. estate, in Mar. 1814, granted six redeemable annuities charged on his life estate. By a deed of even date he appointed a receiver of the rents of the R. estate, & directed that the six annuities should be paid part passu. By another deed of even date he conveyed his life estate to a trustee, upon trust, if default should be made in payment of the six annuities, to sell the estate & pay the annuities. In Aug. 1814, G. granted three annuities, & by deed of even date he directed the receivers & the trustee to pay the whole nine annuities out of the rents pari passu. Notice was given to the receivers & trustee, & the latter entered into possession & paid the annuities, & also the interest on a mtge., charged on the estates, & which had been assigned by G. after the grant of the three annuities, but only for a very short time, after which the rents were only sufficient for payment of the six annuities. In 1846, G., the tenant in tail of the R. estate, purchased the six annuities, & having become entitled to the above-mentioned mtge. he obtained possession of the estate. In 1855, forty years after the last payment in respect of the three annuities, the three annuitants filed their bill for an account. During the pendency of another suit, relating to the incumbrances on the R. estate, the interest of some of these annuitants was purchased by the solr. of one of the other parties to that suit, who covenanted to indemnify his vendors against past & future acts, & he joined as a pltf. in this suit:—Held: (1) an express trust under Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 25, was created in the receivers & trustee, & that sect. applied to the case of one cestui que trust excluding another, & therefore pltf. were not barred by the statute; (2) by reason of the express trust pltf.'s claim was not a stale demand; (3) although pltf. had by their bill offered to redeem prior incumbrances, the ct. would not hold them to that offer, the same being inequitable; (4) the purchaser of the mtge. had constructive notice of the trust for the annuitants by receiving interest on the mtge. from the trustee; (5) the purchase by the solr. was free from champerty, & even if it had been a purchase from his own client no objection on that ground could be maintained by a third party; (6) the direction of the accounts was correct.

(7) The purchaser of a charge upon the estate had, through her agent & solr., attended the audits of the rents of the estate; he was aware that a receiver & trustee received those rents, & he received, on behalf of the purchaser herself, the interest upon the charge purchased by her:—Held: without extending the doctrine of constructive notice, which he [the judge] disclaimed all intention of doing, she was bound to inquire into the rights of the person receiving the rents, & on whose account they were received, & she had, therefore, constructive notice of the instruments under which the rents were paid to the receiver, & of the rights of parties under it.—KNIGHT v. BOWYER (1858), 2 De G. & J. 421; 27 L. J. Ch. 520; 31 L. T. O. S. 287; 4 Jur. N. S. 569; 6 W. R. 565; 44 E. R. 1053, L. JJ.

656. Limited to persons with knowledge of facts.—After the termination of an action in rem against the owners of a ship for wages & disbursements in which pltf. was partially successful, & after the release of the ship from arrest & its transfer to a limited co., the solrs. of the original deft. owners applied ex p. & obtained, under Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127), s. 28, a charging order upon the ship for their costs in the action. For the enforcement of this charge they also obtained, on notice to the mtgees. to whom the vessel had been mortgaged by the limited co., a further order for the appointment of a receiver of freight, & conditionally, for the sale of the vessel. Both orders were subsequently set aside, & the solrs., admitting that the charging order must be postponed to the mtge., appealed as against the limited co.:—Held: (1) the charging order was wrong in form & bad in substance, & together with the consequential order, must be set aside, for, at the most, the property, if any, preserved by the exertions of the solrs. was limited to the interest of those who instructed them to oppose the claims of the master in respect of his lien on the barque, & the vessel had not only ceased to be under the control of the ct., but had changed hands, & become subject to a mtge., before the charging order was applied for; (2) the co., to whom the vessel was transferred, could not be fixed with constructive notice of the possible liability of the vendors for the unpaid costs of their solrs., even though the actual vendor & the promoter of the co. were one & the same person.

(3) The ct., when sitting in admty., should follow the practice of the Ch. Div. in requiring notice to the parties affected, & unless the circumstances are very exceptional, should not exercise, on an ex p. application, its discretionary power of making charging orders under Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127).

the invitation of the ship's local agent, & under the impression that the negligence clause was incorporated by the words "all other conditions as per charterparty," signed a bill of lading which did not repeat the provision in favour of the shipowner.

Owing to negligent navigation there was a partial loss of the goods, & in an action of damage for short delivery brought by the buyer of the goods, as holder of the bill of lading, against the shipowner:—Held: deft. shipowner was liable, for though it was the duty of the master, before signing the bill of lading, to have taken care that it contained the negligence clause, his omission to do so, & consequent want of authority, did not prevent pltf. from relying upon the document, as deft. shipowner, upon whom the onus of proof lay, had failed to show that pltf., as holder of the bill of lading, had notice or knowledge of the contents of the charterparty, for the effect of pltf., as buyer, sending to the seller of the goods the form of charterparty attached to the contract went no further than to advise the seller that the charterparty to be made by him as shipper of the goods with the shipowner must not contain terms less favourable to pltf., as receiver of the goods under the bill of lading, than those in the form attached to the contract.—THE DRAUPNER, [1909] P. 219; 78 L. They called in these loans, & in accordance with the general practice in such cases, the bill brokers on the morning that the loans were repayable went to pltf.s, gave each of them a cheque for the amount of the call, & received in exchange the bonds that had been deposited as security. The cheques having been dishonoured, pltf.s sued defts., who had received in the course of the same day the bonds in question from the bill brokers, pltf.s alleging that by a practice or usage the bonds were impressed with a trust in their favour until the cheques were honoured:—Held: the bonds being negotiable & passing by delivery were not impressed with a trust in favour of pltf.s.

will be concluded as though he had actual knowledge.

(3) If a fact is bona fide, but incorrectly, stated by one party to another, who therefore pays money under a belief of the accuracy of that fact, & the means of knowledge as to its correctness are as much within the reach of one party as the other, the party who has paid the money may recover it back on a discovery of the mistake, provided it would be against good conscience that it should be retained. Accordingly, the holder of a bill neglected to present it when due; in consequence of which the previous parties refused to be bound by it. The holder then insisted that the bill was on a wrong stamp, & therefore void; & he insisted on being paid back the consideration which had been received for the bill, & threatened to sue if he were not paid. The bill was inspected, & appearing to be on a wrong stamp, the holder was paid the amount. It turned out that the bill was on a proper stamp, it being drawn in Ireland on an Irish stamp:—Held: the money was recoverable back, though no fraud was imputed to him that had received it.—*MILNES v. 663. Culpable negligence.—In 1816 D. assigned a policy of assurance on his life to a trustee to secure a sum of money owing to W., & soon afterwards the solr. of W. caused a memorandum to be entered in the office of the insurance co., directing that all letters were to be sent to such solr., & the premiums were thenceforth paid by W. through the hands of such solrs.; but the insurance co. were not informed on whose behalf the solr. acted. In 1826 D. became bkpt., & his assignees declined to interfere respecting the policy. The premiums continued to be paid by W. through his solr., during his life, & by the exors. of W. through their bankers, after his death. D. died in 1839:—Held: (1) the policy was in the order & disposition of bkpt., & there was not any notice given to the insurance office of the assignment of the policy to take it out of such order & disposition; (2) negligence, as applied to cases of constructive notice, supposes the disregard of a fact known to the purchaser which indicated the existence of the fact, the knowledge of which the ct. imputes to him, & such negligence may, without a fraudulent motive, be so gross as to justify the charge of constructive notice.

665. — Not amounting to fraud.]—On Jan. 18, 1883, A., a solr., obtained from his sisters, B. & C., their signatures to two deeds, by which, in alleged consideration in each case of the release of a debt of £400 & payment to them of £300, they conveyed their shares of freehold property, which was subject to a mtge. to K., to A. in fee. No money was at the time due from B. & C. to A., nor was any payment whatever made to them. The deeds were not read over or explained to B. & C., who had no idea that they were conveying their property, & signed in full reliance on A.'s statement that he was going to clear off the mtge. & wanted to send the deeds to K. On the next day A. deposited the deeds with a bank as security for an advance. In applying for the advance before the execution of the deeds, A. had told the managers that B. & C., who were joint owners with himself of the property, were going to convey & "were assisting with the deeds," but that nothing would be paid to them as consideration money, as the money was to be invested in a colliery in which A. was interested. The manager handed over the deeds to the solr. of the bank & merely told him that he was to exercise great care & diligence in investigating the title. The solr. being dead, it did not appear what inquiries were made by him, but the advance was made to A. A. having absconded, the property was claimed by the bank as equitable mtgees., & the claim was resisted by B. & C. on the ground that the conveyances, having been obtained by fraud & misrepresentation, were void as against them. They also relied on deeds which purported to be reconveyances of the property by A. to B. & C., of Jan. 18, 1883, which were attested but did not bear a seal, & which had only been discovered amongst A.'s papers after he absconded:—Held: (1) inasmuch as B. & C., though they might not understand the nature of the deeds, knew they were executing something which dealt in some way with their property, the deeds of Jan. 18, 1883, were not void but voidable only, but as the statements made by A. to the bank manager were such as to have clearly put the bank upon inquiry, which would, if made, have led to the detection of the fraud & to a refusal of the advance, & therefore to have affected the bank with constructive notice of the fraud, the equity of the bank must, on the ground of their negligence, be postponed to that of B. & C.; (2) the rule that the ct. will not postpone a legal mtge. to a subsequent equitable mtge. on the ground of any mere carelessness or want of prudence did not apply as between two equitable claims; (3) the absence of a seal from the deeds of reconveyance, there being no evidence that they had ever been sealed, rendered them invalid.

(4) A degree of negligence not amounting to fraud is sufficient to fix a person claiming under an equitable title, as distinct from a person having the legal estate, with notice of facts, which, but for such negligence, he would have discovered.—*NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND v. 671. — — —.]—It has been said in argument that investigation of title & inquiry after deeds is "the duty" of a purchaser or a mtgee.; & no doubt, there are authorities, not involving any question of registry, which do use that language. But this, if it can properly be called a duty, is not a duty owing to the possible holder of a latent title or security. It is merely the course which a man dealing bonâ fide in the proper & usual manner for his own interest, ought, by himself or his solr., to follow, with a view to his own title & his own security (LORD SELBORNE).—AGRA BANK, LTD. v. BARRY (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 135, H. L.

672. — Effect of neglect to inquire—Whether probability of false answer material.]—(1) Adjoining premises X. & Y. were respectively conveyed to testator by deeds of 1840 & 1843, & then united. He devised them to his sons, who made an equitable mtge. by deposit of the deeds of Y. & the probate of the will. The mtgee. believed, from the sons' statement, that the whole property was comprised:—Held: the property X. was not comprised in the equitable mtge.

(2) A mtgee., who is informed that there are charges affecting the property, & is cognisant of two only, cannot claim to be a purchaser without notice of other charges, because he believes that the two, which satisfy the word "charges," are all the charges upon it. He is bound to inquire whether there are any others.

(3) A real estate belonged to three partners; one retired & conveyed his share to the two others, "subject to all charges & mtges. affecting the same," & the two made an equitable mtge. to defts. There were three charges on the property, but defts. knew of two only, & made no inquiry as to there being more:—Held: having notice of the terms of the conveyance to the surviving parties, defts. were bound to inquire whether there were any other charges, & not having done so, that they could not, as against the third equitable charge, insist on being purchasers for valuable consideration without notice.

The rule with respect to the consequence of a purchaser abstaining from making inquiries, does not depend exclusively on a fraudulent motive for such abstinence. When the circumstances of a case put a purchaser on inquiry, a false answer or a reasonable answer given to any inquiry, may dispense with the necessity of further inquiry; but where no inquiry has been made, it is impossible to conclude that a false answer would have been given if an inquiry had been made, or such as would have precluded the necessity of any further inquiry.—JONES v. The solr. afterwards deposited the deeds with C. by way of equitable mtge.:—Held: D. having by his negligence enabled the solr. to commit the fraud, C.'s equitable mtge. was entitled to priority.

The deed of 1888 referred to an earlier deed of 1883 which contained restrictive covenants applicable to the property mortgaged, but the mtgees. made no inquiry as to the custody or contents of this earlier deed, nor was its production insisted on. It had been in the mtgor.'s possession continuously from 1901, together with the other title deeds of the property. The mtgor. had given an equitable charge on the same property in 1889 to the trustees of his marriage settlement, of whom he was one:—Held: (1) although there had been some negligence by the mtgees. in not requiring an abstract & not further investigating the mtgor.'s title, & also in not inquiring as to the deed of 1883, yet the sum of their carelessness did not amount to such gross negligence as would disentitle them, or a purchaser from them, to the protection of the legal estate, as against the holders of the prior equitable charge.

(2) The "gross negligence" in cases of this description which would render it unjust to deprive a prior incumbrancer of his priority meant, not, carelessness of so aggravated a nature as to be due to the neglect of precautions which an able man would have observed, & an attitude of mental indifference to the rights of others.—Lealie v. The bonds having been realised by the broker to cover losses incurred by him in the course of the transactions, A.'s wife filed a bill against the broker to recover the value of the bonds & cheques, on the ground that the amount constituted her separate estate, & that the broker had notice of the fact:—Held: the broker had neither actual nor constructive notice of the settlement, & the bill must be dismissed with costs.

Knowledge wilfully avoided.—Fraudulent avoidance.]—(1) A., upon his marriage, conveyed his property to the use of himself for life, with remainder to a trustee to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the use & intent, that his wife might receive a jointure with remainder to the first & other sons of the marriage; & he reserved to himself a power to charge the estate with the sum of £2,000; & he covenanted against incumbrances: the estate was, in fact, at the date of the settlement, subject to a mtge. of £800. This mtge. was assigned to B., who, at different times, advanced to A. sums amounting in the whole to £4,000. Previously to advancing his money, B. was told by A. & his wife, that there was a settlement; but they assured him that it did not affect the husband's land:—Held: this was not sufficient to fix B. with notice of the settlement.

(2) Notice of a settlement, purporting not to affect the property in question, is not notice of the actual contents of the settlement.

(3) The cases on constructive notice resolve themselves into two classes: first, where a party has had actual notice that the property has in some way been charged or incumbered; & where he has been held to have had notice of the particular charges or incumbrances affecting it; & secondly, where the ct. has been satisfied that a party has fraudulently avoided inquiry. The proposition of law, upon which the former class or cases proceeds, is, not that the party charged had notice of the particular incumbrances, but that he had notice of some general fact, which he ought to have inquired into. The proposition of law, not that a party has abstained incautiously to inquire, but that he has fraudulently avoided the knowledge (WIGRAM, V.-C.)—JONES v. SMITH (1841), 1 Hare, 43; 11 L. J. Ch. 83; 6 Jur. 8; 66 E. R. 943; affd. (1843), 1 Ph. 244, L. O.

b. Omission by purchaser.—To inquire into facts disclosed in recitals of deed.]—Where in the recitals of one of the title deeds to land facts are disclosed which point to a possible breach of trust having been committed, a purchaser who omits to inquire has constructive notice of such facts as it is reasonable to suppose he would have learnt upon inquiry, but not of such facts as it is possible he might have learnt.—*Flower v. the chairman should be empowered to accept for & on behalf of the co. bills to a specified amount on L.'s depositing securities of a specified value. The sub-committee afterwards directed the chairman to accept the bills, & he did so, & handed the bills over to L.; but he allowed L. in exchange to deposit securities of a less value than the amount fixed by the resolution of the board. The bills were afterwards recognised in various ways by the board as binding the co., though it did not appear that the directors generally were aware of the insufficiency of the securities deposited. At the time when the arrangement was entered into the board were aware that the securities which L. had agreed to deposit were in the hands of different persons, from whom he would have to obtain them in exchange for the co.'s acceptances:—Held: the bills so accepted, being in the hands of bonâ fide holders for value, were binding on the co.

(2) It was said that although Messrs. Overend, Gurney & Co. might not have had actual, or even constructive notice of the circumstances under which the bills were issued, still that what they had done was equivalent to a wilful shutting of their eyes to the circumstances of the case, & that, but for their own wilful blindness, they would have had cognisance of all the facts of the case. Now, it is obvious that a charge of that kind throws upon those who make it the burden of establishing it by evidence. In my judgment they have not discharged themselves in the least degree of that burden; nor have they, in my judgment, established in any way either actual notice, constructive notice, or the notice I have just now mentioned—namely, the notice to be attributed to a person who wilfully shuts his eyes to the facts which, if he had not done so, he would have known (SELWYN, L.J.).—*Re LAND CREDIT CO. trustees of a public library for an injunction to restrain interference with the access of light & air to that building, by offices in course of erection by an insurance co. The library was erected on land demised to pltf. for a term of 99 years, the lease containing a covenant that the lessees should not at any time during the term, without the consent in writing of the lessor, make any alteration whatsoever in the general form or arrangement of the building so to be erected, or any other alteration by which the value of the same should be depreciated. The library was built in conformity with the plans agreed upon, except so far as they were varied—it was alleged, with the consent of the architect & surveyor of the lessors—the windows in particular not being identical with those delineated in the plans. Defts. having purchased the adjoining land of the lessors, pulled down the buildings thereon, & commenced the erection of offices of a much greater height than the former buildings. They denied any material interference with the access of light & air, & asserted that pltf. were not entitled to the easement claimed by them, as such easement was not granted by their lease:—Held: pltf. in changing the situation & increasing the dimensions of the windows of their building had not committed any breach of covenant, & defts. had sufficient notice of the existence of the alteration to put them on inquiry.

W.'s land was afterwards sold to deft., who had no actual notice of the agreement, but knew of the existence of the window:—Held*: the mere fact of there being windows in an adjoining house which overlook a purchased property is not constructive notice of any agreement giving a right to the access of light to them.—*ALLEN v. 700. —Original deed lost or destroyed—Restrictive building covenant.]—Certain lands were subject to a building scheme, the provisions of which were contained in a deed of 1854. The purchaser of a plot was informed by the vendor in good faith that the original deed was lost or destroyed, & what purported to be a true copy was produced. This copy subsequently proved to be defective. An action was brought by an adjoining owner to restrain deft. from erecting or allowing to remain upon his land certain buildings which contravened the provision as to a building line. The property in respect of which he was entitled to sue had certain erections upon it contravening another building stipulation, which provided that no erection should be built within 4 ft. of a boundary fence :—Held: (1) deft. was affected with notice of the building stipulations, for that there was nothing in this case to take it out of the general rule that notice of a deed is notice of its contents; (2) pltf. had only committed a trivial breach of a trivial covenant, & such a breach did not disentitle pltf. from having the building stipulations strictly enforced.

The third party to the action had sold the property to deft., & upon such sale had written a letter agreeing to indemnify deft., as purchaser, against all "costs, damages, & expenses" which deft. might suffer or incur "by reason of the building stipulations & conditions being other than those set out in the copy." The issue whether by virtue of such indemnity the third party was liable to pay the costs of the whole proceedings was tried subsequently to the hearing of the action :—Held: (3) the costs were within the discretion of the ct., & under the contract of indemnity deft. was entitled to recover from the third party all costs for which he was liable—that is to say, the costs of pltf. as between party & party & his own costs as between solicitor & client.—*HOOPER v. The assignment contained a covenant on the part of A. to insure his life against the conveyance, & to pay the premiums, & in default, to charge the fund therewith. B. gave the trustees notice of the deed so far as related to the purchase only, but not as regarded the charge for the insurance:—Held: as to subsequent incumbrancers on the fund who had given due notice, B. had priority to the extent only of his purchase, & not in respect of the charge for insurance.—Re BRIGHT'S TRUSTS (1856), 21 Beav. 430; 25 L. 705. General rule—Recital of deed notice of contents.]—PLUMB v. FLUITT*, No. 648, ante.

706. ———.]—There is no dispute that the recital of a deed is constructive notice of its contents; but to say that a purchaser is not to complete his contract unless he has the actual inspection of every deed of which he has constructive notice by recital, would lead to a practical inconvenience which would be manifestly absurd. In some families title-deeds are preserved for centuries; if the earliest of those deeds recites a former instrument, made five hundred years since, but not now existing, it would be absurd to say that a contract is not to be enforced against a purchaser because that deed cannot be produced. There must, of necessity, therefore, be some practical limit to the operation of this objection; & the true inquiry seems to be, in every case, whether the absence of the deed recited throws any reasonable doubt upon the title of the vendor. Prima facie, it is to be presumed that the purchaser in the ancient conveyance had actual inspection of every deed recited, & was satisfied with their contents; & further, it is to be observed, that it is not probable that a vendor would recite deeds which afforded evidence against his title. When there is no circumstance to repel the effect of these general presumptions, & when the title under the conveyance which contains the recital is forfeited by sixty years' undisputed possession, I think it a good practical rule to hold that the loss of a deed recited throws no reasonable doubt upon the title of the vendor, & that the purchaser must complete his purchase (LEACH, V.-C.).—PROSSER v. WATTS (1821), 6 Madd. 59; 56 E. R. 1012.

There were separate judgments, at the suit of D., against A. & against B., dated in 1810 & 1812, but a warrant of attorney given by D. in 1819, authorised satisfaction to be entered on the roll as to them. There was no judgment against them jointly for the sum stated in the mtge. The mtge. caused satisfaction to be entered on the roll as to the separate judgments of 1810 & 1812, but made no farther inquiries:—Held: as the mtge. itself had recited a joint judgment for a specific sum, the mtgee. had been guilty of negligence in not looking farther into the matter, & must therefore be taken to have had a proper notice of the unsatisfied claim under the deed of 1823.—*MONTEFIORE v. 744. — Not to notice of lessor's title.—Possession of land by a tenant affects a purchaser with knowledge only of the tenant's rights, & not with knowledge of the lessor's title.

An inquiry of the tenant to whom the rent is paid is not an inquiry which ought reasonably to be made by a purchaser, so that, by reason of his omission to make such inquiry, he is not affected either by Conveyancing Act, 1882 (c. 39), s. 3, or by the law as it stood before the passing of the Act, with constructive notice of anything he might have learned if such inquiry had been made.

Under [Conveyancing] Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 2 (8), "purchaser, unless a contrary intention appears, includes a lessee, or mtgee., & an intending purchaser, lessee, or mtgee. or other person who, for valuable consideration takes or deals for any property." The reason why it is necessary to quote that is because it was suggested in argument that a purchaser for valuable consideration could only set up that he was without notice in the case where his vendor was in possession. That definition shows that under [the above Act] that is not so, & I have my doubts whether it ever was so (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—HUNT v. LUCK, [1902] 1 Ch. 428; 71 L. J. Ch. 239; 86 L. 748. After this B. made a legal mtge. in fee of one moiety to secure his private debt to a person who knew that the property was the place of business of the firm. Some years afterwards B. absconded, & C. was obliged to pay the debts of the firm, all of which had been contracted since the mtge., & a large balance thus became due to him:—Held: as the mtgee., when he took his security, knew that the firm was in possession of the property, he had constructive notice of the title of the partnership, & his claim must be postponed to that of O.; & the circumstance of the debts paid by C. having been incurred since the mtge. did not affect the case.—*CAVANDER v. 753. Mortgage of policy by surviving trustee.—A policy was assigned to two, on trusts not appearing on face of assignment. At request of surviving trustee, A. paid premiums on the policy & lent money to him, taking a deposit of the policy as security & giving to the office earlier notice than the cestuis que trust. A. was told by the trustee that he was solely interested in the policy, & made no further inquiry as to the interest of the deceased trustee. The necessity for borrowing to pay premiums arose from the default of the trustee:—Held: (1) A. had constructive notice of the trusts; (2) notice to the office was not necessary to perfect the title of the cestuis que trust, & A. had no lien on the policy-moneys for the premiums paid by him.—*CLACK v. 755. Share certificate transferred by one trustee—Share certificate in two trustees.—(1) H., a sole trustee of shares, executed a transfer & delivered it with the certificate of the shares to a mtgee. who had no notice of the trusts. The mtgee. did not register his transfer until after notice of the trust:—Held: the transfer could not be impeached.

(2) The certificate showed that the shares had formerly stood in the names of two persons:—Held: this was not enough to put the mtgee. on inquiry or fix him with notice.

(3) Although it is true that, as between him & the co., S. [deft.] did not become the owner until after registration, nothing but his own act was necessary to make him complete master of the shares. His position was like that of a person to whom an estate is conveyed, to become legally vested on the performance of some condition, such as the making of a demand, or the like; & in such a case, notice of a trust would not prevent the subsequent performance or effect of this condition. It was suggested that the transfer could not be completed without a breach of trust, but that is not so. After the notice, S. did not require H. to commit any breach of trust, or to do anything. It is the case of a person advancing money on an equitable security without notice of a trust, & afterwards getting in the legal estate, & no more involves a breach of trust than when a mere incumbrancer gets in the legal estate as tabula in naufragio (WOOD, V.-O.)—*DODDS v. Plt., the cestui que trust under the conveyance to S., having brought a bill for a conveyance of the property, for which a grant had issued to deft., it was proved that the price paid by deft. to S. was the full value of the land at the time, & that deft. was satisfied with a transfer of possession of the property & a mere receipt for the money, on being assured that there were no title deeds:—Held: there was no constructive notice to deft. of the trust, but even if there had been notice, plt., was a volunteer within 27 Eliz., & the trust in his favour was avoided by the subsequent sale for value.—SPENSER v. GRAY (1848), 1 Legge, 477.—AUS.

(2) Notice of a charge to an indefinite amount, although the notice be inaccurate as to the particulars or extent of the charge, is sufficient to put upon inquiry a party dealing with the property subject to the charge; &, if the actual charge afterwards appears to be incorrectly described in the notice, it is nevertheless sufficient, as a ground for giving priority for the true amount of the charge, as against the party who receives the incorrect notice, but made no inquiry.—*GIBSON v. 762. Payee married woman—Whether notice that money part of her separate estate.]—A bill of exchange was drawn in favour of a married woman, & sent by her trustees in a letter to her. Her husband surreptitiously obtained possession of the bill, & signed her name to it without her knowledge or concurrence, & having indorsed & discounted it through one P., who also indorsed it, he absconded. The wife, before the bill became due, discovered the fraud, & gave notice to the acceptors, who refused to pay at maturity. The discounters recovered at law against P., who sued the acceptors. The wife, by her next friend, filed her bill to restrain this action, & prayed that the acceptors might be ordered to pay the money to her on her separate receipt. The Master of the Rolls decided that no rights could be gained under the forged signature; that the payee being a married woman affected the party taking the bill with notice that it was the separate property of the wife; that the holder had a right to retain it, though he must not sue upon it, & that the acceptors must pay the money to the married woman. Upon appeal:—Held: (1) P. was a bona fide holder for value, & as such legally entitled to the bill; the ct. would not interfere to defeat his title; (2) no blame was attributable to him for not making inquiries other than of the husband, as to the wife's signature, & the bill would be dismissed with costs.

(3) Qu.: whether the fact of the payee being a married woman being known was constructive notice that the money formed part of her separate estate.—DAWSON v. PRINCE (1857), 2 De G. & J. 41; 27 L. J. Ch. 169; 30 L. T. O. S. 237; 4 Jur. N. S. 497; 6 W. R. 171; 44 E. R. 903, C. A.

763. Absence of receipt in deed—Not notice of other irregularities in deed.]—(1) Pitts, sought to set aside a conveyance made by their ancestor, as they alleged, while a lunatic, under undue influence, & for an inadequate consideration. Deft., who claimed under a derivative title from the purchaser, insisted that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice:—Held: as no notice, actual or constructive, had been proved, the ct. would not interfere, & the bill would be dismissed with costs.

(2) The absence on a deed of a receipt for the consideration, though it is notice of its non-payment, is not constructive notice of other irregularities in the transaction.

(3) The doctrine of Kennedy v. Green, No. 628, ante, requires to be administered with the greatest care & delicacy, & to be so acted on as, on the one hand, to protect a purchaser for valuable consideration against all the world, &, on the other, so as not to encourage fraud, by permitting a purchaser to disregard the plain & obvious marks & symbols of it.

764. Money lodged in bank by treasurer of corporation—Notice of ownership in corporation.]—D. being appointed treasurer to a corp'n. in 1841, A., B., & C. became his sureties to the extent of £2,000. D. opened a banking account, in which he was described as treasurer; but this designation was added without his authority, & was afterwards struck out. It was understood between D. & the corp'n. that he should always have a considerable balance in his hands, of which he might make interest for his own profit. In Aug. 1848, D. drew out £2,300 from his banking account, & placed the same in another bank in the name of his son, a minor. In the same month D. obtained his son's indorsement of a receipt, & withdrew the £2,300 from his name & placed it in that of his daughter, who was of age. On Sept. 29, 1848, A. received notice of D. being a defaulter in his accounts with the corp'n. A. called upon D. & required an explanation & indemnity. D. then gave to A. the deposit receipt for £2,300, upon which, it being signed by the daughter, A. received that sum from the bank. In a suit by the corp'n. against D. & his sureties:—Held: there was sufficient evidence to show that the £2,300 was part of the corp'n. moneys, & A. ought to have made further inquiry, & therefore, the sum must be restored to the corp'n.—*BERWICK-UPON-TWEED (MAYOR, ETC.) v. 765. Adjudication in bankruptcy published in London Gazette—Whether notice of title of assignees in bankruptcy.]—(1) The publication in the London Gazette of an adjudication in bkpcy. under Bkpcy. Act, 1861 (c. 134), is not, for all intents & purposes, notice to all the world of the title of the assignees in bkpcy. to bkpt.'s estate. S., the holder of fifty shares in a telegraph co., was adjudicated bkpt. in Oct. 1864, & the adjudication was duly advertised the same month in the London Gazette. In Nov. 1864, C. was appointed assignee. The shares were not at that time thought to be of much value, & the assignee took no steps in respect of them until July, 1869, when their value had considerably increased. S. died in 1866, leaving his widow his extrix., who was, according to a provision to that effect in the arts. of assocn., recognised by the co. as the only person entitled to his shares. A transfer of the shares was accordingly made into the name of the widow, & by the time that C., the assignee in bkpcy., took any steps with respect to the shares, 45 of them had passed into the hands of purchasers for valuable consideration without notice & were registered in the names of such purchasers. On motion by C. to rectify the register :—Held : C.'s title could not prevail against that of the purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, & the motion accordingly, so far as it regarded the 45 shares, would be refused with costs, the co. being ordered to transfer the remaining five shares into the name of C.

The mode or form of assignment is absolutely immaterial provided the intention of the parties is clear. To effectuate the intention an assignment for value in terms present & immediate has always been regarded in equity as a contract binding on the conscience of the assignor & so binding the subject matter of the contract when it comes into existence if it is of such a nature & so described as to be capable of being ascertained & identified (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—TAILBY v. ## Part IX.—Conversion and Reconversion.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

772. Origin of doctrine—Equity regards that as done which ought to be done.]—LECHMERE v. LECHMERE (LADY), No. 878, post.

773. ———.]—By articles previous to the marriage of G. with pltf., reciting her portion to be £2,800, & that deft., as an advancement of his brother, etc., had agreed to pay £4,000, it was agreed to be laid out in the purchase of lands, or in some church, college, or other renewable lease, to be settled to the same uses as the freehold & leasehold estates, which G. was seised & possessed of, are appointed to be settled; the last limitation to G. & his heirs. The £2,800 & £4,000 had never been laid out in land, but remained in money to G.'s death; he by will devised all his freehold, leasehold, & copyhold lands, lying in I., & in E., or elsewhere, to pltf. for life, & after her death to deft. & his heirs; & his personal estate, after paying his debts & legacies, he gave to pltf., & made her & deft. exors.:—Held: the £2,800 & £4,000 must be laid out in the purchase of lands of inheritance, or in church or leasehold, for if there had been only a general devise of his lands, this money would certainly have passed.

No sort of election was made by the husband; then at the time of the will, & his death, it stood in equity as it did in the articles either to be laid out in freehold or leasehold; & therefore this ct. will call it one or the other, according to the rule in equity, that what is agreed to be done, must be considered as done. If it had not been for the locality, estates in I. & E., no doubt could have arisen; but then follows, "or elsewhere," which is the most comprehensive word he could have used. It is said the lands do not lie anywhere, for they are not yet purchased. When people make such descriptions as testator had done here, they intend to pass everything they have in the world; now the money is somewhere, & that by the transmutation of this ct. is changed into land (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—GUIDOT v. GUIDOT (1745), 3 Atk. 254; 26 E. R. 948, L. C.

774. ———.]—(1) This ct. considers things contracted to be done, as actually done, & lets them have all the consequences as if formally executed.

(2) Money to be laid out in land to the use of A. & his heirs, will entitle A. to the money in this ct.

(3) Where a person is tenant in tail, reversion in fee to himself, the ct. will give him the money, because by a common conveyance he may bar the entail & reversion.—TRAFFORD v. BOEHM (1746), 3 Atk. 440; 26 E. R. 1054, L. C.

775. ———.]—(1) Legacy out of a fund in the East Indies, given over in case of death of legatee before he might have received it, vested from death of testator.

(2) An estate devised on trust to be sold with all possible diligence or in a reasonable time, is considered as sold from testator's death.

The ct. always in such a case considers it as sold the moment the testator is dead; for where there is a trust, that is always considered as done, which is ordered to be done & the ct. cannot measure the time (LORD THURLOW, C.).—HUTCHEON v. MANNINGTON (1791), 1 Ves. 366; 4 Bro. C. C. 491, n.; 30 E. R. 389, L. C.

Campbell*, [1893] 3 Ch. 468.

776. ———.]—By articles previous to the marriage of F. & E. the wife granted to trustees, etc., an undivided sixth part of certain estates for eighty years, if S. should so long live, & then, upon trust, as soon as convenient after the death of S. & after settlement made by the husband of an estate called the F. estate, & of a rentcharge of £260 to which he was entitled in reversion, expectant on the death of S., absolutely to sell & dispose of the same, & apply the money arising from the sale thereof, & of the other premises after mentioned, upon the trusts after mentioned. By the same articles, the husband covenanted, within two years, to convey the F. estate to the same trustees, upon the like trusts as were declared as to the undivided sixth; & likewise covenanted, within six months after the death of S., to settle upon them the rentcharge upon the trusts therein mentioned. The trusts of the moneys to arise by sale of all the premises directed to be sold were then declared to the husband for life, then to the issue of the marriage, &, in default of issue, as the husband should appoint. The husband died in the lifetime of S. without issue, having by his will, after confirming the marriage articles, given to his wife all the real & personal estate, to which he became entitled by his marriage, & which should remain undisposed of at his death, & the residue of his personal estate, & appointed her his extrix., & having devised all other his real estate to his wife for life, with remainder to deft., S. afterwards died. No sale took place; & no settlement was made of the F. estate, according to the articles. The widow entered into possession of that estate, conceiving herself to be only entitled as tenant for life under the will of her husband; &, upon her death, deft. entered, as entitled in remainder under the same will. Upon a bill filed by the exor. of the widow, to whom she had devised all the residue of her estate, real & personal, claiming to have the F. estate sold under the covenant in the marriage articles, & the produce paid to him as part of the personal estate of the widow:—Held: (1) the covenant to convey being absolute & unqualified, the estate must be considered as having been converted into personalty by the marriage articles; (2) testator could not be held to have elected to take it otherwise, the period of sale not having arrived when he died; (3) the will afforded no evidence of an intention to pass it as real estate; (4) the widow could not, by any conduct, tending to show in what light she considered it, at all affect the question.

(5) The covenant to convey is, in equity, equivalent to a conveyance; & I do not apprehend that, for the present purpose, it makes any difference, whether the lands are directly conveyed to trustees for sale, or covenanted to be conveyed to them for that purpose. That which is covenanted to be done, is considered as done; & the case is, therefore, the same as if a conveyance of the estate had been made, at the end of the two years, on the trusts of the settlement (GRANT, M.R.).—STEAD v. NEWDIGATE (1817), 2 Mer. 521; 35 E. R. 1039.

777. ———.]—J. conveyed fee simple estate, upon trust by sale, etc., to pay certain debts, & the residue to himself, his exors., administrators, & assigns, without any equity thereon in favour of his heirs or real representatives, notwithstanding the estate might remain unconverted at the time of his death. The estate was sold after his death:—Held: no part of the produce was liable to probate duty.

The expression [conversion out & out] is strictly applicable to a conversion which the ct. has jurisdiction to make & will make, only by enforcing equities & executing trusts, which it declares or imputes, for the purpose of carrying into effect the intentions expressed or implied of the owner of the land. In cases where the real estate is not, in fact, altered at the time of the owner's death, equity considers not what might have been done but what ought to be done, & will declare or act upon the trusts which are required for the purpose of making the actual conversion, at the instance only of those who show themselves entitled to the benefits of such trusts (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—MATSON v. SWIFT (1845), 8 Beav. 368; 14 L. J. Ch. 354; 5 L. T. O. S. 405; 9 Jur. 521; 50 E. R. 144.

778. ———.]—(1) It is an established principle in equity that when money is directed or agreed to be turned into land, or land agreed or directed to be turned into money, equity will treat that which is agreed to be, or which ought to be, done as done already, & impresses upon the property that species of character for the purpose of devolution & title into which it is bound ultimately to be converted (BOWEN, L.J.).

(2) What is it that will constitute an election in equity? Nothing but that which would be a binding agreement in law (BRETT, M.R.).

(3) To reconvert property there must have been a binding contract, that is, a contract on which some relief could be given at law or in equity, the performance of which would affect the property during the life of H. If there was a binding contract, the performance of which could affect the property only after the death, the property is not affected at the time of the death, & there is no re-conversion (BRETT, M.R.).

Nothing is better established than this principle, that money directed to be employed in the purchase of land, & land directed to be sold & turned into money, are to be considered as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted; & this in whatever manner the direction is given; whether by will, by way of contract, marriage articles, settlement, or otherwise, & whether the money is actually deposited or only covenanted to be paid, whether the land is actually conveyed or only agreed to be conveyed. 793. ———.]—(1) Money upon a marriage was agreed to be laid out in land in fee, & settled on husband & wife, remainder to their sons in tail male, remainder to the husband, his heirs & assigns for ever. A covenant, that until the money be laid out in land, the interest to be paid to the persons who were to have the rents of the lands when purchased. The husband purchased several estates, but never settled any, & died intestate without issue, leaving a considerable real estate to descend to his heir at law:—Held: the heir might compel the administratrix, the widow, to invest this money in the purchase of lands; & the lands descended upon him would not go in satisfaction of the covenant, except as to such as were purchased after the covenant.

(2) It is now a settled point, that where the securities are appropriated, the money shall go as land, not only to the issue of the marriage, but likewise to a collateral heir or general remainderman; unless there appears some variation in the parties intent. I therefore think that this case falls within the common known rule, that money articulated to be laid out in land is to be looked upon as land (LORD TALBOT, C.).

(3) One rule of satisfaction is, that it depends upon the intent of the party; & that which way soever the intent is, that way it must be taken. But this is to be understood with some restrictions; as, that the thing intended for a satisfaction be of the same kind, or a greater thing in satisfaction of a lesser: for, if otherwise, this ct. will compel a man to be just before he is generous; & so will decree both.

(4) This case turns entirely upon L.'s intent at the time of these purchases made. Those made before the covenant can never have been designed to go in performance of the subsequent covenant, his intent being clear, that the whole sum of £30,000 should be laid out from the time of the covenant. Then there are terms, with covenants to purchase the fee; but terms are not descendible to the heir, & so no satisfaction. The like of reversions; especially seeing the lives did not fall in during L.'s own life (LORD TALBOT, C.).

(5) As to the purchases of lands in fee simple in possession, it is to be considered, that there was no obligation upon L. to lay out the whole sum at one time. Now here are lands in possession, lands of inheritance, purchased; which though not purchased with the privacy of trustees, yet it was natural for L. to suppose that the trustees would not dissent from those purchases, being entirely reasonable; the design of inserting trustees being not to prevent proper, but improper purchases; & though they were not purchased within the year, yet nobody suffered by it; & so this circumstance cannot vary the intent of the party in a ct. of equity (LORD TALBOT, C.).—LECHMERE v. 8.—The principle of C. S. U. C. c. 12, s. 66, relating to the conversion of infants' estates sold under that Act, is also applicable to all cases where it is necessary for collateral purposes to effect the conversion of an infant's estate from realty into personalty; the rule of the ct. in all such cases being that the conversion premises for £3,900, A. would convey them to him for that sum. B. assigned to C. the lease & the benefit of this agreement. A. died, & by will gave all his real estate, generally, to D., & all his personal estate to E. & D. equally. Within the limited time, but after the death of A., C. claimed the benefit of the agreement from D., who accordingly conveyed the premises to C. for £3,000:—Held: this sum when paid would be part of the personal estate of A., & E. was entitled to one moiety of it as such.

§25. — Mere declaration insufficient.]—A testator devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to trustees upon trust, after payment of his debts, etc., & a certain annuity, for all his children, who being sons should attain 21, or being daughters attain that age or marry; & he proceeded thus: "I give to my trustees a power of sale over all or any part of the real & personal estate herein devised & bequeathed to them, & I declare that my residuary estate so bequeathed in trust shall, for the purposes of transmission, be impressed with the quality of personal estate from the time of my decease." Four children of testator became entitled under his will. In an administration suit by the eldest son against the trustees, a decree was made directing, a sale of the residuary real estate. It was not necessary to resort to the real estate for payment of testator's debts or funeral or testamentary expenses. J., a younger son of testator, was an infant when the decree was made. Subsequently, on attaining 21, he obtained leave to attend proceedings under the decree. He died intestate before the direction in the decree for sale of the real estate had been carried into effect:—Held: (1) the words of the will were not sufficient to effect a conversion of testator's residuary real estate into personalty at the time of his death; (2) the decree in the administration suit, being made in exercise of the power given to the trustees, operated as a conversion from the date of the order, & the share of J. in the residuary real estate remaining unsold at the time of his death must be treated as personalty.—*HYETT v. §26. —.]—Although the legislature can, by a simple enactment to that effect, make personalty devolve & pass to a series of persons successively for the same interests as if it had been realty, an individual can only do so by the creation of an imperative trust for the conversion of the proceeds in the purchase of lands, such lands, when purchased, to be conveyed, according to the nature of the estates, upon further trusts. It then directed that, until purchase, the dividends of the Bank Stock should be paid to such persons as would be entitled to the rents of the lands when so purchased; & the stock itself was to be held in such manner & upon the same trusts as were declared as to the lands directed to be purchased, or as near thereto as the nature of the property would admit. The husband died intestate, leaving his wife surviving, who also died. The Bank Stock had never been interfered with:—Held: the heir-at-law of the husband had no title to the Bank Stock.—Re WHITTY'S TRUSTS (1875), 9 L. R. Eq. 41.—IR.

personalty into realty & for the settlement of that realty to uses which will secure the devolution or create the estates desired to be created.

A declaration that personalty shall devolve or pass to persons successively as realty, although in cases of doubtful construction it may help the ct. to construe the instrument as creating an imperative trust for conversion, is not, per se, operative, & a bequest of personalty on trust for sale & to hold the net proceeds "upon the trusts & in the manner upon & in which the same would be held & applicable if they had arisen from a sale of" freehold hereditaments by the same will "devised in settlement under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38)," is not an imperative trust.

Where, therefore, the freeholds referred to had been strictly settled:—Held: a person who had become entitled to an estate tail in them had become entitled to the personalty bequeathed without executing a disentailing assurance.

A mere declaration that personalty shall devolve or pass to persons successively as realty is in itself inoperative, for the whole doctrine of conversion turns on the maxim that equity considers to have been done what ought to have been done pursuant to the trust; & a mere declaration such as I have mentioned creates no obligation as to dealing with the property in one way or another. It is true that such a declaration, in cases where the construction of an instrument is doubtful, may help the ct. to construe the instrument as creating an imperative trust for conversion & this, I think, is more especially the case where the express limitations contained in the instrument are limitations appropriate only to real estate; but except on the question of construction, such a declaration as that to which I am referring is, I think, according to the decisions, absolutely nugatory (PARKER, J.).—*Re WALKER, MACINTOSH-WALKER v. On Oct. 12, 1901, S., the first tenant in tail, died intestate. On his death O., as tenant for life, entered into possession of the settled securities & continued in such possession & receipt of income until his death on Jan. 6, 1923. On a summons taken out by the trustees to have it determined whether the funds & investments remaining subject to the trusts of the settlement now formed part of the estate of S.:—Held: (1) what settlor had done was to define the duty of the trustees by reference to Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), & thus to make it optional to them to invest either in personal securities or in land, with the result that the settlement did not impose a paramount obligation on the trustees to invest the funds in real estate which was essential to conversion; there being no such direction it was incompetent to settlor, not having the powers of Parliament, to effect conversion by incorporating Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 22 (5); (2) the funds formed part of the estate of S., the first tenant in tail under the settlement, & were payable to his legal personal representative.—*Re TWOPENY'S SETTLEMENT, MONRO v. (1) A trust for sale cannot in equity convey real into personal estate unless it is valid & effective.

(2) A trust for sale contained in a will was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities, but the trusts of the property & the rents & profits until sale were good, & the interests of the beneficiaries did not fail:—Held: the real & not the personal representatives of a deceased beneficiary were entitled to the proceeds of a sale of the real estate made under the order of the ct.

Where it can be seen that the trust for sale is mere machinery for facilitating a division between the persons for whom the property is destined, I think that effect ought to be given to the equitable interests, even though the instrument by means of which the division is intended to be carried out may prove to be unavailing (STIRLING, J.).—*GOODIER v. Testator named his wife & his son L. extrix. & exor. to his will. The widow died in 1839, thereafter L. nominated two persons to appraise the land, & in compliance with such direction a valuation was made, & one of the sons, A., having accepted the offer of the land as directed by the will, immediately thereupon agreed to sell, & did sell the same to L. & another brother, who subsequently assigned or released his interest to L.: L. later went into possession, paid most, if not all his brothers & sisters their shares intended for them by testator inasmuch as being ascertained within the limits of the rule they had the right in equity to elect to take the property as real estate.

This doctrine of election for the purpose of reconversion, which proceeds on the footing of the equitable property in the thing being vested in those that take the proceeds of sale, shows that the ct. does allow persons thus entitled to take the property as of a different quality to that which testator intended (CHITTY, J.).

Where testator intended that several persons should take a gift in money they may all concur in saying, "We will not take it in money, but we will take it in land" (CHITTY, J.).—*Re DAVENON, BOWEN v. The trust for sale was admitted to be bad as not being limited to take effect within the prescribed period; the will contained no direct gift of the income of the property until sale in favour of the persons entitled to the proceeds of sale if the trust for sale had been good.—Held: as the persons who were intended by testator to take the beneficial interest in his property were persons who could be ascertained within the rule against perpetuities, the gift to them was good; though the trust for sale was bad, it was mere machinery for the purposes of division, & could be disregarded, & the beneficiaries took the property as real estate.—*Re APPLEBY, WALKER v. 833. — [—].—A devise of real estate in trust for a bachelor or spinster for life, with remainder in trust for any wife or husband he or she may marry for life, with remainder to his or her children, is not void for perpetuity because the class of children to take must be ascertained at the death of the first tenant for life, & the interpolation of a life interest to an unascertained person cannot make any difference. But a trust for sale which does not arise until after the death of the unascertained wife or husband is void for perpetuity & does not effect a conversion. Therefore, if there is no other trust for sale, the children take the real estate as unconverted.—Re GARNHAM, TA v. BAKER, [1910] 2 Ch. 413; 85 L. J. Ch. 646; 115 L. T. 148.

834. Trust ended by disentailing deed.—In 1805 real estates were settled by a will, in the events which happened, to the use of A. for life, with remainder to his eldest son, pltf., in tail male, with remainders over. The will contained usual powers of sale with trusts to reinvest the proceeds of sales in lands to be held upon the same uses & trusts as the settled estates. In 1899 pltf. & A. disentailed & resettled the estates to the use of A. for life in restoration of his life estate under the will, with remainder to pltf. for life, with remainder to pltf.'s first & other sons successively in tail male, with remainders over. At the date of the disentailing deed there was in the hands of the trustees of the will a sum of £15,000, being proceeds of sale of parts of the settled estates which A. had sold under the powers conferred on him as a tenant for life by Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890. This sum was also disentailed & settled to such uses as pltf. & A. should by deed jointly appoint, & by the resettlement they appointed that sum to be held by the trustees "as capital moneys arising under Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, from the premises thereby settled." Pltf.'s only son died in infancy, & the question arose whether the £15,000, which had not been reinvested in land, was real estate, or whether it vested in reversion in pltf.'s infant son absolutely as personality.—Held: the disentailing deed entirely put an end to the limitation & trusts of the will; the resettlement of the £15,000 as capital moneys under Settled Land Acts did not impress it with the character of realty; & it vested in reversion in pltf.'s infant son absolutely as personality.—*Re ASPINALL'S SETTLED ESTATES, ASPINALL v. C. Power or Discretion to convert.

(a) In General.

835. General rule.—Necessity for power to convert.—Defect not supplied by court.—On marriage the husband executed a deed poll whereby he purported to settle all his real & personal estate on the wife & the heirs of her body by him begotten, obliging her to give each of her children by him begotten £1,000 apiece at 21, & to divide the residue equally amongst them at her death.—Held: this gave an estate for life only to the wife with remainder in fee to the children as tenants in common; the marriage articles so far tied up the property of the estate, that a real estate purchased by him in his lifetime with part of his personal estate must be considered as personal estate & be disposed of accordingly.

At the time of the making of the articles there was no provision made to empower the husband to change the money into land, or the land into money, & then the ct. cannot imply it (BUTLER, J.).—LOWTHER v. WESTMORELAND (EARL) (1784), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 64; 29 E. R. 1064.

836. — Discretion limited by intention of testator.—J. by his will devised & bequeathed certain real estates, & sums of money charged upon his nephew, H.'s estates, etc., to trustees, on trust, to lay out the residue of his personal property, after payment of legacies, either in the purchase of lands of inheritance, or at interest, as his trustees should think most fit & proper; & then, upon trust, to pay the rents, profits, & interest, to H., for life; & after his decease, to convey & assign the whole to the first & other sons of H., in tail male; remainder to the daughter or daughters of H., in tail general; remainder to his niece, C., for life; remainder to her first &

& remained in undisturbed possession until 1874, when he sold & conveyed to C., who, in 1876, filed a petition for the purpose of quieting his title.—Held: the direction to convert the real estate did not give the land the character of personality till actually turned into money. The direction in the will to have the land valued & to offer it at that price to the sons in succession was in effect providing for a sale at that price, & the amount of the valuation was the proceeds of sale.—Re CURRY (1876), 85 Gr. 377.

other sons in tail male; remainder to his natural daughter, A., for life; remainder to her first & other sons in tail male; remainder to her daughters in tail general; remainder to his niece, M., for life; with remainders, as above, to her sons & daughters; remainder to testator's own right heirs, exors., & administrators. The trustees never acted. O. & H. died without issue, & V., first son of A., became tenant in tail upon the death of his mother. V., & his children, infants, died, & his wife obtained administration, & claimed the personal fund as personal property, the same never having been invested in lands. The next remainderman claimed it as land; & the question was, whether it was to be considered as land or personal property:—Held: it was to be considered as land, the discretionary power given to the trustees being limited by the intention of testator, as collected from the whole of the will taken together.—COWLEY v. HARTSTONGE (1813), 1 Dow. 361; 3 E. R. 729.

837. — Discretion negatives conversion.—A testator directed his trustees to sell his real estates, reserving to them a discretion by the clause “& as & when if they should, from time to time or at any time, think fit, to sell & dispose of his real & personal estate as they should think proper,” one-sixth part or share of testator's real & personal estate, or the produce thereof, was to be paid, transferred, & assigned to each of his children. No conversion had taken place:—Held: the share in the realty of one of the children who had died intestate descended upon his heir-at-law in its unconverted state.

A conversion qualified by a discretion is not the same as an absolute conversion.—HARDING v. TROTTER (1853), 21 L. T. O. S. 279; 1 W. R. 502.

PART IX. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.— O. (b).

d. Discretion to invest in land or securities—Whether conversion.—Where there was a gift of both real & personal property to trustees with power to convert, followed by a discretionary direction to invest the proceeds of such conversion into personal securities with an imperative direction to invest the same in land & to hold the same on trusts applicable only to realty:—Held: there was a trust for conversion into realty & the conversion was a party affecting it with the character of realty from the commencement.—Re SANGER, RANKIN v. LESTER (1903), 38 R. N. S. W. 384; 20 N. S. W. W. N. 132.—AUS.

845. Part of property sold.]—The produce of real estate, sold under a power in a will, passed by a residuary clause with the personal estate, the object being a conversion out & out; but part remaining unsold was held a resulting trust for the heir-at-law.—*BROWN v. 846. At discretion of trustees—Time for exercise of discretion.]—(1) Devise in trust to sell in such manner & at such time as the trustees shall think proper. The period of conversion, as between those entitled for life & in remainder, depends, not upon an arbitrary discretion, nor even a sound discretion in each case, but upon some fixed rule, ascertaining a given period, as upon a trust to sell with all convenient speed; controlled in this instance by consent.

The direction to the trustees in this case is not, as it usually is, to sell as soon as conveniently may be, but at such time & in such manner as they shall think fit; yet I do not think this could make the right of the tenant for life entirely dependent on the time at which the sale should actually take place (GRANT, M.R.).

(2) When land is directed to be converted into money it is in the option of the parties interested in the money to keep the land unsold if they think proper (GRANT, M.R.).—WALKER v. SHORE (1815), 19 Ves. 387; 34 E. R. 361.

847. —.]—Testatrix devised the residue of her real & personal estate to W., his heirs, exors., & administrators, according to the different natures & qualities thereof, upon the trusts following, i.e., upon trust to retain & keep the same in the state it should be in at the time of her decease as long as he should think proper, or to sell & dispose of the whole, or such part thereof as & when he or they should from time to time think expedient, either by public auction or private contract, to any person or persons who should be willing to become the purchaser or purchasers; & then upon trust to invest the money to be produced by such sale or sales, together with all ready moneys of testatrix, in his or their own name or names, & in that of two of the residuary legatees thereafter named, in the public funds, or upon real or Govt. securities; & then testatrix directed that W., his heirs, exors., or administrators, should stand possessed of & interested in all such the general residue of her real & personal estate, & from & after such sale, then of the stocks, funds, & securities whereon the same or any part thereof should have been invested, in trust, out of the rents, issues, & profits, interest, dividends, & proceeds thereof, to pay several life annuities; & from & after full payment; & satisfaction thereof, testatrix directed that W., his heirs, exors., & administrators, should stand possessed of all the said residue of her said real & personal estate & effects, & of the stocks, funds, & securities whereon the same or any part thereof should have been invested, & the rents, issues, & profits, interest, dividends, & produce thereof, in trust for five of the said annuitants, including W., in equal shares & proportions, as tenants in common, & for their respective heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns, according to the different natures & qualities thereof:—Held: upon the terms of this will, it was not the intention of testatrix that the property should be converted out & out, but that W. had a discretion to sell the whole or any part of it when & as he might think expedient, & until he exercised that discretion the property must be considered to remain in the state it was in at the time of the death of testatrix.—*POLLEY v. 848. —.]—Here there is a discretion not to sell in certain cases. The will provides that the trustees may resort to a public or private sale. It gives them the power of selling, or of deferring the sale, & of causing any part of the estate to be valued, not before it is sold, but instead of being sold. I admit that there may be some difficulty in treating it as personal estate, subject to all the trusts in the will, & that it may be difficult for the trustees to comply with the directions given in this part of the will; but at the same time I cannot say that there is no discretion not to sell (PARKE, B.).—*A.-G. v. e. At discretion of trustees—Whether court will interfere by injunction with exercise of power.]—Where a power of sale is given to trustees & their survivor, unlimited as to the time of exercising it, the ct. will not interfere by injunction with the exercise of it by the surviving trustee, upon the grounds; (1) that the property would realise a higher price if the sale were postponed, there being conflict of evidence on this point, or (2) that the trustee had entertained an offer of money to refrain from selling, such offer having been eventually refused.—JAMES v. EVANS (1877), 3 V. L. R. 132.—AUS.

847 i. —.]—Testator devised all his real & personal estate to trustees, & declared that it should be lawful for them to sell all or any part of the lands, & for such price as should seem fit & reasonable, & to lay out & invest the money to arise from such sale in the purchase of stocks, or real securities, in Canada:—Held: the power or trust was discretionary, not only as to the time of sale, but also as to whether there should be a sale at all or not, & it operated no conversion of the land into personal estate until exercised.—ROWSELL v. WINSTANLEY (1859), 7 Gr. 141.—CAN.

847 ii. —.]—Where there is no absolute direction to sell, but a discretion is given to a trustee to sell or not, there is no conversion; but the property remains of the character it possessed at the death of testator until the trustee has seen fit in his discretion to change it by an execution of the power.—Re PARKER'S TRUSTS (1881), 29 Gr. 389.—CAN.

847 iii. —.]—By marriage articles the mother of the intended wife covenanted to devise lands, or a gross sum of money equivalent thereto, to the trustees, upon trust to invest if they should so think fit, & to hold them upon specified trusts. The mother subsequently devised land to her daughter, & directed the trustees to convey it. This was not done. The husband survived the wife:—Held: there was no conversion of the lands, & accordingly they passed to the heir-at-law of the wife.—OWEN v. OWEN & SCHOMBERGER, [1897] 1 L. R.

847 iv. —.]—A will contained no direction to trustees to sell, but there was power to sell & dispose, & there was also power to borrow on the security of the trust-estate for the purposes of the trust, but in carrying such sale or sales into effect, or in borrowing it should not be competent to the trustees to do any act which might in any way affect or limit the liferent of his widow. Testator's wife & three sons & two daughters survived him. At his death his estates consisted of five heritable subjects, movable property. The heritage remained unsold at the death of the widow, when a question arose as to whether the rights of beneficiaries who had predeceased the widow were heritable or movable in their persons:—Held: as the exercise of the discretionary power of sale conferred on the trustees was not indispensable to the execution of the trust, & had not been exercised, there had been no conversion.—SHEPPARD'S TRUSTEE v. SHEPPARD, ETC. (1885), 12 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1193; 22 Sc. L. R. 801.—SCOT.

849. —[—]—Testator by his will directed & declared, that it should be lawful for, & empowered, his trustees, if they in their discretion should think fit, absolutely to sell his estate at C. & H. discharged from the several annuities & other charges thereby created, & that, for the purpose of effecting any such sale, it should be lawful for them, by any deed duly executed, to revoke the trusts & declare others; & he declared, that their receipts should be good discharges, & directed that they should stand possessed of the money to arise from such sale, upon trust in the first place to pay the costs of such sale, & to dispose of the remainder of such moneys for the purposes & in such manner in all respects as was thereinbefore directed concerning the residue of his personal estate. Testator's estate at C. & H. had not at the time of the institution of the suit been sold:—Held: such clause could not be considered as directing a sale under all circumstances, nor as tantamount to a positive gift to testator's residuary legatee, but there was a discretion to be exercised by the trustees; & until such discretion should be exercised the property remained real estate for all the purposes of testator's testamentary dispositions.—*SHIPPERDSON v. 850. — For purposes of distribution.]—Real estate was devised to trustees for the benefit of several parties for life, & after their deaths to be distributed among their children & others. The deviser added this direction, "it shall be lawful for the trustees to sell the same, or any part thereof, as shall appear most expedient to any trustee or trustees for the time being, towards the management of my property & affairs." A part was sold by the trustees soon after the death of the deviser, it being advantageous so to sell it for building, & the rest was sold ten years after by order of a ct. of equity:—Held: neither sale was of property directed to be sold by testator.—Re EVANS (1835), 2 Cr. 850 i. — For purpose of distribution.]—A trustee directed his trustees, upon the death of his widow, either to hold & manage his heritable estate, & divide the revenue thereof among his children equally or to sell the same, & if sold, the price to be divided to & among his children equally; or to convey the property to his children equally, & that, if a majority of his children alive at the time request it, his trustees should not sell the heritable property, but should convey it to his children or their issue. There followed a survivorship clause & a conditional institution of issue, which latter provided that, if there should be more than one of such issue, the deceased child's share should be divided among them equally. The trustee was survived by his widow & by six children. After the widow's death the trustees sold the heritage. One of the children predeceased the widow leaving issue, & two others died after the widow, but before the sale of the heritable property, one of them leaving issue:—Held: prior to the sale of the heritage there was no conversion.—SETON'S TRUSTEES v. SETON (1880), 13 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1047; 23 So. L. R. 770.—SCOT.

850 ii. —[—]—Testator directed his trustees to dispose to his children equally the residue of his heritable & movable estate on the youngest child attaining the age of 25 years, but declaring that it should not be imperative upon his trustees for the purpose of this division to convert the residue of his estate into cash, but they shall be entitled should they deem it to be more beneficial for any of his children to have portions of his estate allocated to them, to have such parts or portions valued & to assign the portions so valued to the child or children. It was declared that vesting should take place at the date of payment, & that the trustees should have powers of sale. In 1887, when the youngest child attained the age of 25 years, a vesting took place, there were six children. The trustees then distributed the movable estate, but, with the consent of the beneficiaries, they continued to hold the heritable estate, which consisted of one tenement house, till 1906, when it was sold. A., one of the children, died in 1902. A question having been raised between A.'s heir-at-law & his exor. as to whether A.'s interest in his father's heritable estate was heritable or movable:—Held: a sale was indispensable to the due execution

Power was given to the trustees to sell the trust estate, which consisted, apart from some furniture & plate, solely of heritage in the form of shops & small flatted houses. One-half the daughter's share was settled by the will. On the marriage of the daughter, E., in 1865, a deed was executed appointing new trustees of the will, & declaring that they should stand possessed of the settled half of E.'s share on the trusts of the will, & the unsettled half upon the trusts declared by a settlement of even date. By the settlement the unsettled share & certain other property were conveyed to the same trustees upon trust for E., with no words of limitation, until her marriage, then upon trust to invest & to hold the investments upon the usual trusts in favour of her, her husband & children, with an ultimate trust for her, her exors., administrators, & assigns. At the date of the settlement a large part of the real estate devised by the will remained unsold. The will contained a power of sale with a trust for reinvestment in freeholds, copyholds or leaseholds, with an interim power of investment in personalty. The trustees sold & invested in Consols; the trust for reinvestment was never exercised.—Held: the share of a child of B., who died intestate after the exercise of the power of sale & during the life of the last tenant for life, devolved on his heir.—*Re BIRD, PITMAN v. 865. Postponement of sale—"As soon as trustees shall see necessary"—Conversion.—B. devised lands to trustees in fee in trust to apply the profits until sale, for the benefit of all his four children & the survivors & survivor of them equally, & on further trust, that "as soon as the trustees shall see necessary for the benefit of the children" they should sell the premises & apply the money for the benefit of his four children, equally to be paid at 21 or marriage; A. the eldest of the four children attained 21 & married & died without issue intestate, leaving a wife.—Held:

the land being in all events devised to be sold, though the time for sale was left to the exors., was personal estate, & A.'s widow must have a moiety of A.'s share, & the profits of the land until sale must go as the money arising upon sale would.—*DOUGHTY v. 866. — "Whenever it should appear advantageous"—Conversion.—A testator devised his real estate to trustees to sell, whenever it should appear to them advantageous. He directed annuities to be paid to charities out of his personal estate until his real estate should be sold, when he gave the produce to charities. But if the charity bequests should be defeated, he gave the principal money to plffs. No sale of the realty took place, the infant plffs. having, under the chief clerk's certificate finding it for their benefit, elected to take the land in lieu of the produce.—Held: the real estate must be considered as converted from the death of testator, from which time plffs. were entitled to the rents.—ROBINSON v. ROBINSON (1854), 19 Beav. 494; 52 E. R. 442.

Annotation:—Refd. Re Hotchkys, Freke v. Calmady (1886), 34 W. R. 569.

867. — "Such time as most beneficial"—No conversion.—A testator devised his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust that a piece of land, part of his real estate, might be absolutely sold as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, in such mode as his trustees should decide upon, but in case it should so happen that at that time the complying with his will in that particular would be a sacrifice of property, then it was his will that the piece of land should not be disposed of until such time as his trustees should judge most beneficial for his estate, & when all his children attained the age of 21 years, then he devised his real & personal estate to his children equally as tenants in common. All testator's children attained the age of 21 years. The trustees did not sell the piece of land.—Held: the trustees had a discretionary power & not a trust for sale, & there was no constructive conversion of the piece of land; consequently, the heir-at-law & not the next of kin of a deceased child was entitled to the share of such child.—GLOVER v. HEELIS (1875), 32 L. T. 534; 23 W. R. 677.

868. — Conversion.—A testator gave an annuity to his wife, & he gave & bequeathed to his seven children all his real & personal estate after deducting the annuity; & after his wife's decease the annuity, together with all the rents, interests, dividends & profits arising from his estate, to be divided between his seven children equally; & he directed his exors. to sell & convert into money his furniture, lands, houses, tenements, & other property whenever it should appear to their satisfaction that such sale would be for the benefit of his children, & all the money arising from the sale to be invested for the benefit of his children.—Held: the direction to convert was imperative, & operated from the death of testator.—*Re RAW, MORRIS v. The will contained a common form power of postponement, & the trusts were such as ordinarily applicable to personal estate:—Held: the will created an immediate trust for sale with a mere power of postponement, which was a trust for sale within Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 63.—Re JOHNSON, COWLEY v. E. Conversion by Consent or at Request.

874. Consent & request distinguished.]—A settlor by her marriage settlement conveyed freeholds to trustees upon trust for sale with her consent & that of her husband during their lives & the consent of the survivor of them during his or her life & then at the discretion of the trustees, & upon trust to pay the income to the settlor in the events which happened during her life, & subject thereto in default of issue, which occurred, to hold the trust premises as the settlor should appoint, & in default of such appointment, if the settlor survived her husband, in trust for her, but if her husband should survive her then in trust for her next of kin, with power for the trustees to retain the trust premises unsold at their discretion, & a direction that the same while remaining unsold should be deemed personal estate & devolve as such. By her will the settlor, in pursuance of the power given her by the settlement, appointed the hereditaments, premises, & estate subject to the settlement at her death, if she should die without issue of the marriage, to her husband, his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns absolutely. The husband died on Dec. 3, & the settlor on Dec. 7, 1916. The freeholds were not sold during the life of the settlor, & were claimed on her death by her heirs as realty & by her next of kin as personalty:—Held: (1) conversion took place from the date of the settlement, for its terms indicated an intention that the freeholds should be treated as personal estate, & there was an imperative trust for sale, such trust not being prevented from being imperative because the sale was "with the consent of" or "at the request of" the tenant for life; (2) the will was not evidence of an election to reconvert, being an appointment which failed, & therefore it was not possible to say what the intention of the settlor might have been; (3) on the death of the husband reconversion did not take place before or upon the settlor's death as there was no resulting trust of the property as land, the property not being "at home"; for, though the settlor was the only person interested in the property, she did not direct that the property should not be sold, & the legal estate was outstanding in the trustees; (4) it was necessary in order that property should be "at home" not only that the equitable title should be vested in the settlor, but the whole property legal & equitable.

(5) There is no distinction between the words "with the consent of" & "at the request of" when applied to a tenant for life under a settlement, & in neither case does their introduction prevent a trust for sale being imperative (NEVILLE, J.).—Re FFENNELL'S SETTLEMENT, Re FFENNELL'S ESTATE, WRIGHT v. The £1,200 was invested in the funds, & so remained with the acquiescence of the husband & wife. There was one child of the marriage. The wife survived her husband & afterwards died:—Held: the fund ought to be considered as personal estate.—DAVIES v. GOODHEW (1834), 6 Sim. 585; 58 E. R. 713.

The trustees had power to lease, to concur in a partition of the lands of which the settled estate formed part, & to let or work the minerals, it being declared that all royalties should be considered as income, & all moneys received from working minerals as capital. The trusts of the deed of even date were for the benefit of the husband & wife during their lives, & after their death for the issue of the marriage. This deed also contained a covenant by the husband that he or his representatives would, during his lifetime, or within twelve months after his death, pay to the trustees £1,200, to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. There was no issue of the marriage; the husband died intestate without having paid the £1,200, & the widow's net distributive share considerably exceeded that sum:—Held: (1) the real estate had been converted out & out by the settlement; (2) the husband's covenant to pay the £1,200 was not satisfied by

He left £400 to be laid out in the purchase of land, or on any other security as his trustee should think fit & convenient, to be settled as his lands devised. The intermediate limitations being at an end, & W. being dead, the estate came to P. who was an infant, & being upwards of twenty made a will, & gave all his estate to pltf., & afterwards died, two days before he was at age of 21. A trust to reinvest the proceeds in land, or govt. or real securities, with a direction super-added that these when purchased shall be & enure, & be made liable to the same uses, trusts, estates, limitations & provisos, as the land originally settled, does not amount to a trust for reinvestment in land, at least when the limitations of the land originally settled are applicable to personality as well as realty.

He made similar dispositions of other estates in favour of his children, A., J. & W. respectively, & their respective children. He then gave the residue of his property to E. & A., & if any of the four children should die under 21, he gave the part or parts intended for them respectively to the survivors or survivor of them for life, & after the decease of such survivors or survivor he gave such part or parts to his exors., in trust to sell & to pay the proceeds to their, his or her child or children. E. & W. attained 21 & died without having had any child:—Held: the trusts for sale of the estates devised to E. & W. respectively for life were absolute, & did not depend on E. & W. having children, & the interests which E. & A. took in those estates under the residuary gift were personal estate.—WALL v. COLSHEAD (1858), 2 De G. & J. 683; 31 L. T. O. S. 338; 4 Jur. N. S. 985; 6 W. R. 761; 44 E. R. 1155, L. J. 914. Direction to sell—Conversion.]—ASHBY v. PALMER, No. 1130, post.

915. ———.]—Testator devised, by two testamentary papers, his real & personal estates to trustees. In the first paper he declared the trusts, & among others he created a power of sale in the following terms: "To sell & dispose of the lands, mills, etc., hereby generally & particularly disposed to them, etc." To render these sales effectual, he granted full power to convey, etc. The paper then went on thus: "Declaring always, etc. that my trustees shall by their acceptance hereof be bound & obliged, after the sale of the lands & others before disposed, which I recommend to them to be done as soon as convenient after this trust opens upon them, to satisfy & pay all my lawful & just debts," etc. By a second testamentary paper reciting the first, he said that by the recited paper he had disposed of his heritable & moveable estates to trustees on the trusts therein mentioned, & "Amongst others, my trustees are required to turn my means & effects, thereby conveyed in trust, into money;" & he gave directions accordingly. He further directed, that in case he should die leaving an heir of his body, his trustees should employ the trust funds for the use of such heir; & that as soon as such heir should attain majority or be married, the trustees should "denude themselves of the whole trust & funds" in favour of such heir, but to return to the trustees in case of failure of heirs of his body, without disposing of the same:—Held: the testamentary papers must be construed as amounting not merely to a power of sale for the purposes of the trust, but to a direction to sell in case testator should die without leaving any heir of his body living at the time of his death; therefore, though in fact the real estate was not sold, the positive direction to sell rendered it liable to the legacy duty.—WILLIAMSON v. A. proposed that the estate should be sold as soon as possible, & the produce divided between them, & that until the sale, a receiver should be appointed to divide the rents in the same proportions. This was accepted by B. Before the sale, which was postponed, A. died intestate:—Held: the property had been converted into personalty, & A.'s next of kin, & not his heir, were entitled. In such cases, the effect of the act is to be considered, & not the intention as affecting the real & personal representatives.—HARDEY v. HAWKSHAW (1850), 12 Beav. 552; 14 Jur. 707; 50 E. R. 1171.

932. — Contract enforceable by executors.]—The question in this case is, whether the amount of the purchase-money agreed to be given for a freehold estate of testator, constituted at the time of his death part of his personal estate, & as such is liable to probate duty. The real question is whether at the time of testator's death there was a valid & binding agreement for the sale of his estate which was enforceable by his exor. against the purchaser. There can be no doubt there was such an agreement, & whether to be specifically performed in its original form, or with additional terms & conditions, is wholly immaterial. This being established we may adopt the language of the Master of the Rolls in Laures v. Bennett, No. 807, ante: "It is very clear that if a man seised of a real estate contract to sell it, & die before the contract is carried into execution, it is personal property of him." It certainly seems extraordinary that property which is recoverable by the exor. virtute officii, which belongs to the next of kin & not to the heir-at-law, & which has the character of personalty thus impressed upon it, in every other respect, should lose that character solely in relation to fiscal liabilities. It is difficult to understand upon what principle the conversion into personalty is to stop short of this point (LORD CHELMSFORD).—A.-G. v. BRUNNING (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 243; 30 L. J. 933. — Under power of appointment.]—

Under a settlement certain lands stood limited to such uses as D. should by deed appoint, & subject thereto to the use of D. & the heirs of his body, with remainders over. D. was also absolutely entitled in fee to certain other lands. A railway co. required part both of the settled estate & of the lands to which D. was absolutely entitled. By an agreement not under seal, made between D. & two of the directors of the co., after reciting that D. was owner of certain lands, part of which, being those specified in the schedule thereto, were required by the co., & that the purchase-money & compensation to be paid to D. in respect of the taking of such lands had not been ascertained, & that it had been agreed to refer these matters to arbitrators & an umpire therein named, the parties thereto bound themselves to abide by the determination of the arbitrators & umpire. The schedule comprised the lands required by the co., without any distinction as to the titles under which they were respectively held; & a single sum was awarded to D. as the purchase-money for the whole thereof. Before any conveyance was executed, D. died:—Held: the agreement operated in equity as an execution of the power of appointment in the settlement; & the purchase-money was payable to the legal personal representative of D. as part of his personal estate.—Re DYKES' ESTATE (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 337; 20 L. T. 292; 17 W. R. 658.

934. — Non-payment of purchase-money—Contract cancelled.]—If a valid contract is cancelled for non-payment of the purchase-money after the death of the vendor, the property will still in equity be treated as having been converted into personalty, because the contract was valid at his death (JESSEL, M.R.).

The moment [the purchaser] has accepted the title, the contract is fully binding upon the vendor. Consequently, if the title is accepted [by the purchaser] in the lifetime of the vendor, & there is no reason for setting aside the contract, then, although the purchase-money is unpaid, the contract is valid & binding, & being a valid contract, it converts the estate in equity; it makes the purchase-money a part of the personal estate of the vendor, & it makes the land a part of the real estate of the vendee, & therefore all those cases on the doctrine of constructive conversion are founded simply on this, that a valid contract actually changes the ownership of the estate in equity (JESSEL, M.R.).—*LYSAGHT v. 937. ————.]—Sale by lunatic tenant in common.—A., B., C. & D. were tenants in common in fee of certain real estates. A., B. & C. sold & demised portions thereof & the mines thereunder, & covenanted that D., who was of unsound mind, should confirm the transactions as to her shares therein. Subsequently C. became of unsound mind, & A. & B. together, & after the death of B., A. alone, by indentures, which contained covenants with respect to C. & D.'s shares similar to the above-mentioned covenant concerning D.'s share sold, or, in consideration of sums payable by instalments, granted mining leases of other portions of the property. In 1861 A. died, & in 1862 C. & D. were found lunatics by inquisition, & their committee filed a bill against A.'s personal representative for an account of the shares of C. & D. in the purchase-money received in respect of these transactions. This suit was compromised by an agreement, whereby deft. undertook to pay pltf. a certain sum in satisfaction of C.'s claim, & the same sum in satisfaction of D.'s claim. This compromise was confirmed by the ct., & an order was made authorising the committee to concur in the sales & leases, directing that the sums named in the agreement should be paid into ct. to the credit of C. & D. respectively, & a part of each carried to "the real estate account," & a part to "the mineral account." In 1867 D. died leaving C. her heiress-at-law, & sole next of kin, & both sums were carried to the credit of her estate. After the death of C. in 1874, her heir-at-law & her personal representative each filed a petition claiming the sums standing to her credit to the real estate account, & to the mineral account:—Held: the order of the ct. was made under Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853 (c. 70), s. 124, the mining leases were in fact sales, & consequently all the funds in question must be treated as real estate except as to so much of them as was received in respect of the sales in which C. had concurred before she became of unsound mind.—Re SMITH (A LUNATIC) (1874), 10 Ch. After his death an action by the vendor against the exor. & trustee of the will for specific performance of the contract was compromised by deft. thereto, & the contract was put an end to upon the terms that the vendor should retain the deposit money & have his costs; & this compromise was confirmed by the ct. by an order made by consent in an administration action in the presence of the tenant for life of the real estate & the trustee, all the remaindermen being infants. Upon the further consideration of the administration action, the devisees contended that they were entitled to so much of the personal estate as was equivalent to the unpaid purchase-money, upon the ground that the purchase was a conversion by testator of his personal estates to that extent, & that Real Estate Charges Acts, 1854 (c. 113) & 1867 (c. 69), & the above Act had not altered the law in that respect:—Held: there was a vendor's lien, & the above Act applied; accordingly all the devisees were entitled to was the real estate charged with the unpaid purchase-money, & therefore on the facts to nothing; but, moreover, the order of compromise would be fatal to their claim, if otherwise good.—*Re COCKCROFT, BROADBENT v. 958. ———.]—Option by contract extended by will.]—Under partnership articles an option was given to purchase real estate, upon which the partnership business was carried on, & which was the private property of A., one of the partners, within six months from his death. By the will of A. the period of option was extended to three years. The option was not exercised until after the six months had expired:—Held: as the option was not exercised within the period limited by the articles, there was no conversion at the time of A.'s death; &, therefore, the purchase-money arising from the sale of this real estate was not liable to probate duty.

By the contract the option was to be exercised by a notice in writing within six calendar months after testator's death; it was a contract existing between the parties at the date of his death & his estate was subject to that contract. If that contract had been carried out by the exercise of the option so given the conversion effected by the acceptance of the option would take effect from the time at which the contract was made—that is to say, from a period antecedent to the death of testator (NORTH, J.).—*Re GOODALL, GOODALL v. 959. ———.]—Exercise of option not followed by completion.]—At the date of a testator's death in 1897 certain premises, of which he was owner in fee, were the subject of a building agreement, under which leases were to be granted to M. This agreement contained a clause enabling M. to purchase the freehold reversion in the whole or any part of the premises affected by the agreement, if notice was given before a fixed date, & as from the date of such notice he was to be deemed the purchaser of the specified reversion. On Sept. 28, 1899, M., having become entitled to leases of twenty houses, gave notice of his desire to purchase the freehold reversion of the houses. M. died insolvent on Dec. 25, 1899, the day fixed for completion, & no steps were taken to enforce the contract. The trustees of testator subsequently re-entered upon the whole property, including the twenty houses, in exercise of a power in the agreement enabling them so to do:—Held: (1) the giving of the notice exercising the option was a conversion once for all of the realty into personalty, & the mere fact that the exercise of the option was not followed by completion of the purchase could not undo the conversion which had actually taken place, & therefore the twenty houses must be treated as personalty of testator as from Sept. 28, 1899; (2) the re-entry of testator's trustees did not work a reconversion into realty.—Re BLAKE, GAWTHORNE v. BLAKE, [1917] 1 Ch. 18; 86 L. J. Ch. 160; 115 L. T. 663; 61 Sol. Jo. 71.

After the death of the lessee the administrator, who was also the heir-at-law of the lessee, exercised the option & paid the £1,200 out of his own moneys. Upon a sale by such administrator:—Held: the option of purchase not having been acted upon by the lessee in his lifetime passed as part of his personal estate to his administrator on taking out administration, & was exercisable by the administrator only in such capacity & for the benefit of the persons interested in the personal estate, & to a conveyance by such administrator the concurrence of the next of kin was necessary.

The principle of Laves v. Bennett, No. 807, ante, that the exercise of an option to purchase contained in a contract relates back to the date of the contract so as to effect a conversion of the property as between the real & personal representatives of the party creating the option, is not to be extended to affect the position of the party in whose favour the option is created. When the option is exercised after the death of the person to whom it was originally given, such exercise has no retrospective effect; the only result is that a binding contract comes into existence at the time when the option is exercised; & the time of the exercise, not that of the creation of the option, must be looked at for the purpose of finding the rights of the parties.—Re ADAMS & KENSINGTON VESTRY (1884), 27 Ch. After the date of the lease, the owner made his will, whereby he devised the lands, specifically describing them, to G. for life, with remainders over. After testator's death, the lessees elected to purchase the fee simple of the lands:—Held: upon the special terms of the will, the purchase-money did not fall into the residue of the personal estate, but was subject to the same limitations as had been declared concerning the purchased lands, & therefore G. took a life interest in the purchase-money.—*DRANT v. On June 10, 1890, he made a codicil, which did not in terms refer to the specifically devised property, but expressly confirmed his will. On the same day, but whether before or after the execution of the codicil was not known, he granted a lease of the specifically devised property, with an option of purchase to the lessee. After testator's death the lessee exercised his option by purchasing the property. Upon a summons raising the question whether the purchase-money belonged to the specific devisee or fell into residue:—Held: whether the codicil was executed before or after the lease, testator must have known of the existence of the latter, & by confirming his will had indicated a sufficient intention to pass whatever estate he had in the property to his devisee, so as to take the case out of the general rule established by *Laves v. The property subject to the will consisted partly of realty & partly of money in ct., paid in as the result of compulsory sales. To all of this property the son was absolutely entitled, subject to the life interest therein of his father. On the death of the father the effect of the assignment was disputed:—Held: in the absence of the proper words of limitation, or of any words of reference which might supply the defect, the deed failed to pass both the fee simple in the realty, whether the estate was legal or equitable, & also the money in ct., which must be treated & conveyed as land.—*DEARBURG v. A suit was instituted by the trustees against the cestuis que trust for the administration of the trust, & a decree was made after one of the infants had attained 21, by which, the ct. being of opinion that a sale would be for the benefit of the infant deft. & the adult deft. consenting, a sale was ordered. In 1866, actions were commenced, one to administer his estate & two others by incumbrancers upon estates settled by testator in favour of himself for life with remainder to C. in fee simple; but in 1867, an arrangement was come to between the parties interested whereby the actions were settled upon terms that the real & personal estates of testator & the said real estate of C. should be sold, that out of the proceeds of sale provision should be made for incumbrances, debts, & certain jointures & legacies &, as to the residue, that one-fifth thereof should "follow the limitations contained in testator's will with respect to his real estate." The arrangement provided that it should be confirmed by the ct. & the necessary powers obtained therefrom for carrying the same into effect. By an order of the ct. made in 1868, after reciting that the arrangement was a proper one & for the benefit of the parties interested, including creditors, it was ordered that the same should be carried into effect, & that the real & personal estate of testator & the real estate of C. should be sold & the proceeds paid into ct., & that all further proceedings in the actions should be stayed, except for the purpose of carrying the arrangement into effect, with liberty for any of the parties interested to apply. In pursuance of another order made in 1870, one-fifth of the residue of the funds in ct. representing the proceeds of sale of the said estates, after making provision for the purposes aforesaid, was carried to an account of "the fund which under the arrangement of 1867, is to follow the limitations contained in the will of testator with respect to his real estate." Upon the death, in 1922, of E., the surviving tenant for life, the tenant in tail then entitled in possession consequent upon the determination or failure of the preceding limitations, presented a petition for payment to him of the fund in ct. representing that one-fifth, which raised the question whether the fund descended as realty to petitioner, who, if the real estate of testator had not been sold, would under the limitations of his will & in the events which happened, have been entitled thereto as tenant in tail in possession, or whether that real estate was converted by the order into personalty & therefore vested absolutely in the first tenant in tail by purchase, who had long predeceased the tenant for life:—Held: the order of the ct. confirming the arrangement, having been properly made, effected a conversion of testator's real estate into personalty from the date thereof.—*POLE v. By an indenture which was settled by the Master, & bore the seal of the Lunacy Office, & was executed by the receiver on behalf of the lunatic, the hereditaments were granted subject to the yearly rentcharge to issue thereout, to the use of the trustee, in whom the lease was vested, as purchaser in fee simple. On the death of the lunatic a question arose whether the leasehold hereditaments had been "converted into real estate" & passed to the heir, or whether they went to the next of kin, the order being silent as to preserving the rights of next of kin:—Held: the leasehold term had merged in the freehold reversion, & the hereditaments, being in fact freehold at the death of the lunatic, passed to her heir.—*Re SEARLE, RYDER v. 1010. ——— Payment of legacy duty.—A testator devised to trustees his real estates, upon trust to raise a sufficient sum to pay debts & legacies, & upon further trust to pay his two daughters annuities of £300 each; & he directed that, subject to those trusts, the trustees should stand seised of the real estates, in trust for his brother for life, & after his decease, in trust for his children; provided that it should be lawful for the trustees, with the consent of testator's brother during his life, & after his decease with the consent of the persons beneficially entitled, to sell the whole or any part of the real estate, & out of the purchase-money invest so much as would be sufficient to pay the annuities of £300. Testator died leaving his two daughters, his brother & seven children of his brother surviving. The trustees sold a part of the real estate, & paid the debts & legacies, when it was found that the rents of the residue of the real estate were not sufficient to pay the annuities, whereupon a bill in Chancery was filed by testator's brother & his children against the trustees & testator's daughter; & in pursuance of an order of the ct., the residue of the real estates was sold, & £20,000 part of the purchase-money invested, & the interest thereof applied in payment of the annuities. Testator's daughters & brother having afterwards died, the brother's children became entitled to the £20,000 when the Crown claimed legacy duty on that sum:—Held: if the Ct. of Ch. acted on their general power of ordering the sale of real estate to satisfy charges, legacy duty was not payable; but if the ct. acted on the clause in the will, & in consequence of the will containing that clause, compelled the trustees to execute the power, legacy duty was payable, inasmuch as in that case, the sale of the real estate was substantially by the direction of testator himself.—*HOBSON v. 1012. Mr. Q. took out administration to her estate:—Held: the £1,200 must be treated as realty by Partition Act, 1868 (c. 40), s. 8, incorporating Leases & Sales of Settled Estates Act, 1856 (c. 120), ss. 23–25, & therefore belonged to the co-heiresses subject to Mr. Q.'s life interest as tenant by curtesy.—*MILDMAY v. 1014. ——— Whether exception applies when beneficiary subsequently becomes lunatic.]—On May 21, 1879, N. died intestate, leaving M. one of four co-heiresses-at-law. On Feb. 18, 1880, an action was brought asking for sale of N.'s real estate in lieu of partition. On June 15, 1880, an order was made for sale. The sale took place on Aug. 30, 1880, & the proceeds of sale were carried to the credit of the action, "Proceeds of sale of testator's real estate." On Apr. 22, 1882, by the order on further consideration in the action, one-fourth part of the money standing to that account was ordered to be paid to M. subject to duty. M. left the money in ct., & took no steps concerning it. On Jan. 14, 1884, by an order made on petition presented in lunacy, T. was authorised to apply to the Ch. Div. for a transfer of the one-fourth, amounting to £434 17s. 9d., to the account of M., a person of unsound mind, "Proceeds of the sale of the real estate of N.," & the transfer was made accordingly. M. died on June 10, 1884:—Held: there being no evidence that M. was of unsound mind at the date of the sale & the order for payment to her, the fund then ordered to be paid to her belonged to her absolutely without any trust or equity for reconversion, & went on her death to her personal representatives.—*Re PICKARD, TURNER v. appointed copyhold lands, held of a manor in which there was no custom to entail, to his son in tail, thus creating a conditional fee at common law, with a possibility of reverter to the settlor in case the son had no issue to inherit the lands, or on failure of such issue, if neither he nor his issue had alienated them, which possibility of reverter took effect after the settlor's death, on the death of the son without having had issue. The lands were sold under order of ct. in a partition action, & the proceeds paid into ct. & invested in Consols, some of the persons entitled to the fund being minors. Upon a petition for payment out of the fund in ct., the questions were raised, whether the possibility of reverter, before it took effect, was descendible & devisable, & whether the property was converted into personalty by the order for sale in the partition action:—Held: the possibility of reverter was descendible & also devisable as a "right of entry for condition broken" within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 3, & the property was not converted into personalty by the order for sale, some of the persons entitled thereto being minors & unable to elect to take it as money.—*PEMBERTON v. The mtgor. became a lunatic after the mtge. but before the sale, & continued in that condition until his death intestate in 1906:—Held: the surplus proceeds of sale must be treated as personality notwithstanding the language of the trust.—*Re GRANGE, CHADWICK v. 1023. After death of mortgagor—No conversion—Surplus passes as realty.—WRIGHT v. ROSE, No. 1020, ante.

1024. ————.]—Real estate was conveyed to a trustee, on trust to permit a mtgor. to receive the rents & profits, & upon payment of the principal & interest of the mtge. debt as therein mentioned, to reconvey the estate to the mtgor., his heirs & assigns, but if default should be made in such payment, then that the trustee should enter into possession of the premises, & at his discretion, sell the same, & pay over the residue or surplus, after payment of the debt, interest & costs, to the mtgor., his heirs, exors., administrators or assigns. There was default in payment, but no sale of the estate took place until after the death of the mtgor., who devised it to pliffs. for life, with remainder over in tail:—Held: there was no conversion, but the surplus proceeds passed by the devise as real estate.

If a person charges his real property with the payment of his debts, unless there is a clear indication that it shall be converted out & out, it retains its character of realty, so far as the charge does not extend, until it is actually converted. If the trustee had taken the property with absolute directions to sell & convert it, the circumstances, that the directions had not been carried into effect at the death of testator, might have been immaterial, & it might have been treated as personality. But, in this case, there was no absolute or compulsory direction for the sale or conversion of the estate; it is merely an authority, in a certain event, to enter into possession of this estate, & at the discretion of the trustee to sell it, for the purpose of recovering payment of the debt for the mtgee. The direction to re-convey the estate, in case of payment of the mtge.-money, is inconsistent with the notion that there was any intention that the property should be absolutely converted by the effect of the conveyance (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—BOURNE v. BOURNE (1842), 2 Hare, 35; 11 L. J. Ch. 416; 6 Jur. 775; 67 E. R. 15.

A right of entry was given to the trustees in the event of the death of the parents during the minority of the children. There was no settlement of any money, & no power of sale. The husband & wife exercised their joint power of appointment, & mortgaged the property comprised in the settlement. There was a proviso for redemption which provided that, on payment of the mtge. debt, the mtgee. should reconvey the property to the uses of the settlement. The mtge. contained a power of sale which provided that the mtgee. should pay over the surplus proceeds of the sale to the husband, "his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns." The husband died, & the mtgee. exercised his power of sale, & after payment of the mtge. debt, interest, & expenses, had a surplus in his hands:—Held: there was no resulting trust of the surplus, & the husband's legal personal representative was entitled to the fund, & not his heir-at-law.—*JONES v. will devised that estate to the infant in fee simple, & died. The infant afterwards died intestate. Upon the infant's death, a question arose between the heir-at-law, & the next of kin, of the infant, whether the estate so devised was to be considered as real, or personal estate:—Held: the devise of the estate was a satisfaction pro tanto of what was due from devisor, & £3,330, the purchase money, was to be deducted out of it, with interest, & such £3,330, & the interest, were to be considered as part of the personal estate of the infant.—*GIBSON v. Money paid to exonerate land from claim—Recipient directed to account in subsequent proceedings—Money to retain character of land.]—A wife having an equitable interest in customary estate of small value, her husband, on a family arrangement, received a comparatively large sum for the relinquishment of their rights. An intermediate suit having been instituted, the husband & wife in a joint answer disclaimed all interest; & in that suit there were no further proceedings. The present bill being filed a long time afterwards, the husband & wife again put in a joint answer, claiming the estate in the wife's right. The ct. could not make any personal decree on the wife; & could only direct the husband to account for the £200 he had received, with costs, in case he did not join, & procure his wife to join, in the proper assurances. This £200 having been paid by the wife's father by way of exonerating his real estate from a supposed entail:—Held: it belonged to his grantees of that estate, & not to his personal representative.—*SEDGWICK v. 1031. Money produced by sale of settled estates—Under contract of sale & exchange—Regarded as invested in land.]—In 1775, W. G. devised certain estates to T. H. afterwards T. H. G. for life, with remainder, subject to an annuity in favour of his T. H. G.'s widow, if any, to the use of the first & other sons of T. H., afterwards T. H. G., successively in tail male. Under that devise T. H. became tenant in tail in possession, & he having suffered a recovery, by marriage settlement, to which F. afterwards mentioned was a party, in 1801, settled the estates to the use of himself for life, with remainder, subject to a certain rentcharge for his widow for her life, & a term of portions for younger children, to the use of the first & other sons successively, in tail male. That settlement contained a power for the trustees therein named, to sell & exchange the estates or any part thereof, & directed the money to arise from such sales to be laid out in lands, to be settled to the same uses. In pursuance of such power, several sales & exchanges were effected by the trustees; & with some parts of the moneys arising from such sales, estates were purchased by them & other parts of the moneys remained uninvested in lands, but placed out at interest on securities. By will, in 1804 F. devised all his estates in trust for the second son of T. G. in tail, & by a shifting clause provided, that in case the estates devised by the will of W. should descend to or devolve upon the person then actually in possession, or entitled to the rents & profits of the estates devised by his will, that such estates should be held in trust for the next person entitled under the trusts in his will contained. F. died in 1813, at which time pltf. was the second son of T. G. In 1816, the eldest son of T. G. died, an infant, & unmarried. In May, 1829, W., who was pltf., having attained his age of twenty-one years, entered into possession of the estates devised by the will of T. G. not sold under the power contained in the settlement of 1801; & also of the estates purchased or received in exchange under that power; & in Aug. 1829, suffered a recovery of the estates devised by the will of F.:—Held: upon the supposition, that, according to the practice of the Ct. of Ch., moneys produced by the sale of settled estates under a power of sale & exchange not yet actually invested in land, are yet to be considered as actually so invested, the lessor of the pltf. was entitled in possession to the estates devised by the will of F.—*FAZAKERLEY v. In 1812 the persons entitled under B.'s will commenced proceedings for the purpose of redeeming the two-third parts, & in 1814 a compromise was made, & by indentures of lease & release, the two-thirds were conveyed to S. in fee. S. died without issue:—Held: the right of the mtgors. to redeem was revived by the acknowledgment in 1814 of S., the tenant in tail; & by the conveyance to him he had acquired the absolute interest in the two-thirds, as against the remainder-men under R.'s will.—*PENDLETON v. personal estate to trustees to convert the same into money & to invest the proceeds in the purchase of land to be held upon the same trusts as his real estate, & the will contained a power to sell any part of the lands so purchased & out of the money arising therefrom to purchase other lands to be held upon the same trusts as his real estate. Probate duty was paid upon testator's personality, which was converted into money & invested in the purchase of estates, which were conveyed to the same uses as were declared as to the realty.

After the death of the first tenant for life, the second tenant for life & the remainderman, by a deed of resettlement, resettled the property:—Held: with regard to that part of the real estate which had, under the power of sale in the will, been sold, & was at the time of the death in question personal estate, but subject to a trust for reinvestment in land, such personality, being subject to a trust for reinvestment in land, was to be taken for the purposes of estate duty as converted & as being real estate at the date of such death, & was not within the exemption as personal estate.—*A.-G. v. 1058. ——— Children attaining age of 21.]—A testator, by his will, gave all his real & personal estate to trustees, upon trust, that, as soon as convenient after his decease, they should pay all his just debts & expenses. Secondly, it was his will, his said trusts should permit & suffer his wife to hold one of his houses, with the garden, for her use, to bring up their children E. & M.; & at their arriving to the age of 21 years, then it was his will, all his estates, real & personal, to be sold, & converted into money, & the proceeds to be equally divided between his wife & as many children as she might have at his decease. Thirdly, it was his will, that the public-house to be let as soon after his decease as possible, & all rents arising from his estates to be paid to his wife for the bringing up & support of his wife & children. E. died in testator's lifetime, an infant & unmarried; M. survived her father, but died an infant & unmarried in the lifetime of her mother:—Held: testator intended that, in the event which happened, of the wife & one of the daughters surviving him, there should be an absolute conversion of his real estate; & M. took no interest capable of devolving, on her intestacy, upon her heir.—TILLY v. SMITH (1844), 1 Coll. 434; 4 L. T. O. S. 472; 9 Jur. 409; 63 E. R. 488.

1059. ——— Future event a contingency—Money to be laid out in land if beneficiary attain twenty-one.]—A testatrix bequeathed £8,000 to be laid out in land, & settled on A. & the heirs of his body, & for want of such issue, £2,000 to B. & £6,000 to a charity. By a codicil she said that B. should take nothing unless A. died under 21, & the charity should have but £5,000. B. died before A., & A. died under 21 without issue:—Held: the £2,000 went not as real estate, but as money, & devolved on the personal representative of B., the scheme being that the entire bequest was to continue as money till A. attained 21.—LYNCH v. MILNER (1752), cited in 1 Hov. Supp. at p. 273; 34 E. R. 786, L. O.; revsq. S. C. sub nom. A.-G. v. MILNER (1744), 3 Atk 112.

1060. ——— Rents of realty ascertained insufficient to pay annuity.]—A testator devised & bequeathed the residue of his estate & effects, consisting of freehold & personal property, to trustees, upon trust to call in all accounts due to him, & in case there should not be sufficient to satisfy the annuity thereafter given to his wife, then upon trust to sell all his real & personal estate, & out of the income of the produce thereof, & the rents of his real estates until the same should be sold, to pay his wife an annuity of £300 per annum. The rents of the estates were not sufficient to satisfy the annuity, but no part of the real property was sold till after the death of the widow, at which period a considerable sum was due for arrears of the annuity:—Held: the trust for sale arose immediately upon its being ascertained that the rents were not sufficient for the annuity; consequently, there was a direction for the conversion of the real estate, & the residue must bear the character of personal property.—*WARD v. The tenant for life has received nothing for interest down to the present time; but if the reversion had been sold he would then have received the interest on the amount of the purchase-money; & if the period when the reversion fell in could have been foreseen, & the reversion could have been sold at a fair price, it ought, with the accumulated interest upon it, to have realised the full amount of the fund as it stands at present. II., by his will, gave all his property to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to W. for life, with remainders over. W. had children, but none of them lived to attain a vested interest in the fund included in the settlement. At the date of H.'s death the reversionary interest in the fund was of no value, but, subsequently, owing to the deaths of W.'s children, it became of the value of £37,767. Upon a sale of the reversionary interest:—Held: in apportioning the sum realised between the tenant for life & the remaindermen under the will, the rule in *Beavan v. By his will in 1832, not referring to the settlement, A. directed that his residuary personal estate, or the produce thereof, should be invested, & held upon trust for his son for life, & in default of issue of the son, for A.'s daughters & their children, the daughters taking life interests. By a codicil in 1883 A. appointed that the two several sums of £10,000 mentioned in the settlement should form part of his residuary personal estate, & be paid to his exors. & trustees accordingly. A. died in 1834; the son in 1850, without having had issue; & the son's wife in 1889. At her death a sum of £25,400, Consols represented the two sums of £10,000. The exors. of the will proposed to apportion the £25,400 Consols between capital & income under the will & codicil, treating the capital as amounting to £3,130 16s. only, being the sum which at the death of A. would, if accumulated at 4 per cent. less tax, with annual rents, have produced the value of the £25,400, Consols on the day of the death of the son's widow:—Held: the principle of Re Chesterfield's (Earl) Trusts, No. 1065, ante, applied, & the proposed apportionment was correct.—*Re FLOWER, MATHESON v. Testator died on Sept. 12, 1917, having by his will bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, with power to postpone, & to pay the income to his wife for life, & after her death to divide the estate among his six children. The trustees had received certain sums representing the proportion of the instalments to which testator's estate was entitled. On a summons by them to ascertain how these & the future instalments ought to be treated as between the tenant for life & those interested in remainder in the corpus of the residuary estate:—Held: each instalment of the purchase price of the business already received & thereafter to be received, ought, as from testator's death, to be apportioned as between capital & income in the manner stated in *Beavan v. 1071. —].—Testator devised & bequeathed all his real & personal estate not by his will otherwise disposed of to trustees upon trust to sell & convert the same, with power to postpone conversion as long as the trustees thought proper & to retain any investments subsisting at his death, whether of the kind thereafter authorised or not, & out of the proceeds to pay debts & legacies, & at the discretion of the trustees to invest the residue & to stand possessed of the residuary trust moneys & the investments for the time being representing the same, thereafter called the residuary trust fund, in trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life.

At the time of his death the testator was possessed of preference & ordinary shares in a coal-mining co. The ordinary shares, although not of a wasting character, were not authorised by the investment clause of the will. The trustees therefore sold some of them, & proposed to sell more on a favourable opportunity. They declined to pay to the widow in the meantime the full dividends on the ordinary shares thus retained:—Held: in the absence of any express or implied gift of the income pending conversion, the widow was entitled only to interest at 3 per cent. on the value of the ordinary shares at testator's death, & the rest of those dividends must be invested. Testatrix died without having made any codicil, & left neither heir-at-law nor next of kin. The trustees of their own authority sold the real estate. There was now a surplus over & above what was required for the trusts of the will:—Held: as to such part of testatrix's estate as was personalty at the time of her death, not required for the purposes of the will, the Crown was entitled as bona vacantia; the Crown had no equity to call for a conversion of the real estate; & therefore, the trustees were entitled; & the circumstance of the trustees having of their own authority converted it made no difference.—*TAYLOR v. 1096. — Residuary devise.]—Money arising from the sale, under a power, of lands in Staffordshire forming part of the C. settled estates, was held upon trust to invest it in lands in England or Wales, to be settled upon the limitations of the C. settlement. Under that settlement C. was tenant for life, with remainder to his first & other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to himself in fee. He died without issue, leaving a will by which he gave all his lands in Staffordshire to trustees upon trusts for the benefit of one family, & gave all his real & personal estate not otherwise disposed of to trustees for another family:—Held: the moneys, being impressed with a trust to invest in land, were to be treated as land & would pass under a devise of land. But as under the trust the money might have been invested anywhere in England, it would not pass under a devise of lands in Staffordshire. Therefore it passed under the residuary devise of real estate.—Re CLEVELAND'S (DUKE) SETTLED ESTATES, [1893] 3 Ch. 244; 62 L. J. Ch. 955; 69 L. T. 735; 9 T. L. R. 573; 37 Sol. Jo. 630, C. A.

1097. Does not pass under disposition of personalty—Heir-at-law entitled.]—W. having contracted with the guardian of an infant for the purchase of some timber & bark upon the infant's estate, a reference was made to the master, in a cause for the administration of that estate, to see whether it would be for the benefit of the infant to carry the contract into effect; the master having reported that it would, the contract was performed, & by a decree in the ct., the money arising from the sale of the timber & bark was ordered to be laid out in the purchase of land, in trust for the infant, but in the meantime to be invested in South Sea Stock, in the name of the guardian. The money having been laid out in South Sea Stock, & the infant having attained the age of seventeen, died, & by his will disposed of his personal estate, but made no mention of the South Sea Annuities:—Held: the heir-at-law of the infant was entitled to the South Sea Annuities, & any interest or dividends that had accrued thereon.—MASON v. GOODRICH (1738), West temp. Hard. 449; 25 E. R. 1026.

1098. — — —.]—Trustees holding moneys in trust for a married woman invested the amount in the purchase of land; & by the purchase deed, to which the vendor & they were the only parties, they declared themselves possessed of the estate, in trust to pay the income to the married woman for her separate use, for life, & after her decease, in trust for the benefit of all the children of the husband & wife equally between them; & in default of children without issue, then in trust for the husband in fee, & power was reserved to the trustees, at the request of the husband & wife, to sell the property; & thereupon, with all convenient speed, to lay out the produce in the purchase of other freehold estates, & so on toties quoties. At the end of fifteen years the estate was sold, & the purchase-money was invested as money, & the income was paid to the married woman for 44 years until her death. Several years after the sale of the estate the trustees, by a deed, which the husband & wife executed, declared that they held the fund upon the trusts of the first purchase-deed. The husband died intestate, & the wife survived him for ten years. By her will she gave "all" her "personal estate & effects whatsoever & wheresoever & of every kind soever, either in possession, remainder, reversion or expectancy," unto two of her children:—Held: there was no evidence that the widow intended to change the character of the fund from being real estate; there being children entitled for their lives to the fund, it was not competent for her alone to change its character; but, as the property vested in her subject to her children's life interest, it was competent to her to have given such reversionary interest by will, but the words she had used were not sufficient to include it.—GILLIES v. LONGLANDS (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 372; 20 L. J. Ch. 441; 17 L. T. O. S. 250; 15 Jur. 570; 64 E. R. 875.

1100. Whether passing under specific devise—Devise of testator's share in estate—When description answered by realty remaining unsold.]—Upon a marriage, an undivided eighth share in remainder in fee, belonging to the wife expectant on a life estate in the entirety, was settled in trust for the wife for life, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder to the children in tail, & remainder to the heirs of the wife, & a power of sale & exchange was given to the trustees, who were to invest the proceeds in the purchase of realty in possession, & hold it on the trusts declared respecting the reversionary interest thus settled. The entirety of a portion of the estate was sold, in concurrence with the trustees of the settlement, by the other parties interested in the estate. By the purchase deed an eighth part of the purchase-money was apportioned according to the values of the life interest & the reversion in that share, & the value of the reversionary interest was expressed to have been paid to the trustees of the settlement. In point of fact, however, the whole eighth part was invested in consols, the dividends of which were paid to the tenant for life of the entirety. This state of things continued after the death of the wife, who died without leaving issue, during the lives of her husband & heir-at-law successively, but there was no evidence of their intention as to the destination of the fund beyond what was to be inferred from the above course of dealing with it:—Held: (1) an election could not be inferred to take the property in its actual state, & on the death of the heir-at-law his share of the fund was to be treated as part of his real estate; (2) it did not pass by his will under a devise of all such shares as he might at his death possess in the estate, there being a part of it remaining unsold to answer the description.—Re PEDDER'S SETTLEMENT (1854), 5 De G. The property included large sums of money liable, under the limitations of the settlement to be invested in land:—Held: in order to comply with the condition in testator's will, these moneys must be included in the resettlement.

By the grandfather's will large estates were devised to testator for life, with regard to his son in tail male, parts of which had been sold, & the purchase-moneys were, at testator's death, in the hands of trustees subject to a trust for reinvestment in land:—Held: these moneys were included in the word "hereditaments" & must be resettled.—*Re GOSSELIN, GOSSELIN v. 1110. ———.]—An estate was devised to the eldest son of testator, in fee, charged with four portions of £5,000 each for younger children. The eldest son, on his marriage, settled the estate to the use of his intended wife after his decease, for her life, if she should survive him, with remainder to himself in fee, & covenanted within six months to pay off the four sums of £5,000 & release the estate therefrom. He paid off one sum of £5,000, & died intestate:—Held: the husband was not a purchaser under the settlement, & the covenant in the settlement could not be taken to have been for indemnity only; but so far as the wife & younger children were concerned, the husband had adopted the portions as his own debt, & he had also made them his debt as between his real & personal representatives.

When a man covenants upon his marriage to lay out money in the purchase of land, & to settle the land when purchased in favour of his wife & children, with remainder to himself in fee, the money is converted into land, not only in favour of the wife & children, but in favour of the heir also; & the heir may enforce the covenant where any of the uses of the settlement subsist at the death of the covenantor.—BARHAM v. CLARENDON (EARL) (1852), 10 Hare, 126; 22 L. J. Ch. 1057; 17 Jur. 336; 1 W. R. 96; 68 E. R. 867.

1111. Interim investment in stock—With consent of cestuis que trust—Whether passing under-appointment of personality.—By a marriage settlement executed in Mar. 1823, real estate was conveyed to trustees in fee, to their use during the life of the wife, on trust to pay the rents to her for her life, & after her death to such uses as the husband should by deed or writing, to be by him executed & delivered in the presence of & attested by two witnesses, appoint, & in default of appointment & subject thereto to the common dower uses in favour of the husband. There was a power for the trustees to sell the property with the consent of the husband & wife during their joint lives, & the money to arise from any sale was to be laid out in the purchase of other land, to be settled to the same uses, & until the reinvestment should be made the money was to be invested in the public funds, & the income was to be payable to the persons to whom the rents of the land to be purchased would go. During the joint lives of the husband & wife, & before the date of the husband's will, the land was sold, & the proceeds of the sale were invested in New 3 Per Cents. in the names of the trustees. No purchase of land was ever made, but the income of the stock was paid to the wife during her life. In Oct. 1844, the husband made his will, which was signed by him & sealed, & attested by two witnesses. The will contained the following bequest: "I also give & bequeath all the money & moneys that I die possessed of, whether in the public funds or in the care of W., or elsewhere, after my funeral expenses are paid, unto the sole use & behoof of my children hereinbefore named, share & share alike." W. was one of the trustees of the will, & at the time of testator's death he had in his hands some money belonging to testator. Testator had no money of his own in the funds, nor had he any power of appointment other than that contained in the settlement. Testator died on Dec. 28, 1851. His wife died on Oct. 24, 1881. After her death the question arose whether testator had by his will exercised the power of appointment contained in the settlement, or whether the sum of stock passed as unappointed to his heir-at-law:—Held: inasmuch as the wife had a right to call for the reinvestment of the stock in land, it must be considered as having been land at the time of testator's death, & the will did not operate as an exercise of the power of appointment. Consequently the stock passed to testator's heir-at-law.—Re GREAVES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS (1883), 23 Ch. D. 313; 52 L. J. Ch. 753; 48 L. T. 414; 31 W. R. 807.

1124. Interim interest before purchase of land—Passes as rent of land—No direction for accumulation.—A. by his will, directed his exors. to set apart a portion of his personal estate to secure certain annuities, then to consolidate into one fund his whole fortune & movables, & lay out that fund in purchasing lands, to be limited as specified in a certain deed of entail, & that the principal of the above annuities, as they respectively fell, should be applied in the same way. At A.'s death, the bulk of his personal estate was standing in Bank Annuities, & a convenient investment in land was not made till five years' afterwards:—Held: the money so directed to be invested was impressed with the character of realty from the moment of testator's death, & the tenant for life was entitled to receive the interest of the same, from the period of testator's death, though uninvested in the land as directed.

Where a testator directs his estate to be converted & laid out in a particular investment, without any special direction, to accumulate or add interest to capital, the tenant for life is entitled to the interest actually accruing from the moment of testator's death, though the investment directed has not been made; but, semble: after a year has expired, & the fund is still uninvested, in a question between the tenant for life & the person entitled in remainder, a ct. of equity will take into account the difference between the interest actually accruing & what would have accrued if the proposed investment had been actually made.—*MACPHERSON v. 1130. General rule—Property passes as taken on death of party from whom representatives claim.—

(1) Devise of real estate in trust to sell, & out of the money to pay debts, etc., & with the surplus to maintain & educate the daughter of testatrix until 21, or marriage. But if she should die unmarried, under 21, all such money as should remain in the hands of the trustees, or such parts of the real estates as should remain unsold, if any, to be to the use of A. The daughter lived to attain 21:—Held: this was a conversion out & out & the real estate remaining unsold at her death should go to her personal representative.

(2) There is no presumption of election to take as real estate where there is incapacity, as lunacy.

(3) Property is not to be taken as it is, but as it ought to be at the death of the party from whom the representatives claim.—ASHBY v. PALMER (1810), 1 Mer. 296; 35 E. R. 684.

1131. Land passes as personalty.]—A testator devised real estate to his widow for life, & after her death, to six younger children, with a direction, that if any of these children died under 21, his or her share was to go to the survivors. He then added that it was his desire, that, as soon as the younger survivor should attain his or her age of 21 years, the estate might be sold, & the produce divided amongst the survivors, unless they would rather mutually divide the estate amongst themselves:—Held: the share of a daughter, who attained 21 & died intestate in the lifetime of the widow, was transmissible as part of her personal estate.—PARISH v. PARISH (1824), 3 L. J. O. S. Ch. 21.

1132. — Part of land not sold—Intestacy of settlor.]—A. after reciting that he was desirous that his real estates should be sold, conveyed them to trustees, in trust to sell or mtge. the same, & to stand possessed of the money to be raised, in trust for him, his exors., etc. By deed of even date, he assigned all his personal property, to the same trustees, in trust for himself, his exors., etc. By a third deed of even date, after reciting that he was indebted to various persons, & was desirous that his affairs should be wound up, & his real & personal property converted into money, & his debts paid, & that the conveyance & assignments were made to enable his trustees, in the first place, to pay his debts, he declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the money to arise from the sale or mtge. of his real & personal property, in trust to pay his debts, & then in trust for him, his exors., etc. The trustees sold part of the real estates, & the proceeds were more than sufficient to pay A.'s debts. Shortly afterwards A. died intestate:—Held: the unsold estates were to be considered as personalty.—BIGGS v. ANDREWS (1832), 5 Sim. 424; 53 E. R. 396.

1133. — Infant beneficiary—Inquiry as to benefit of reconversion.]—T. devised & bequeathed to his trustees all his real & personal estate upon trust to convert such part thereof as should not consist of investments producing interest & invest the proceeds & receive the income of all property, & thereout to pay to his wife an annuity of £104 for her life, & to pay out of the remaining income to his son G. such a sum as in the discretion of his trustees should be proper & sufficient for his maintenance, but so that he should not have power to mortgage or anticipate the same. After the son's marriage, in the event of there being any issue, the trustees were to apply such part of the income as they might think reasonable in the maintenance & bringing up of such issue. After the death of the wife & son the trustees were to pay & divide the capital of the trust estate unto & amongst such issue equally. T.'s wife died in his lifetime. G. survived him, & died in 1884, leaving an only child, a son, R. T. left real estate. In 1882 an order was made for the administration of T.'s estate. In 1885 an order was made directing an inquiry whether it would be fit & proper & for the benefit of R., who was an infant, that any & what part of T.'s estate should be retained in the condition in which the same was at T.'s death. R. died an infant in 1888, before any certificate had been made in answer to the inquiry. After the infant's death the question was raised whether, in the events that had happened, the real estate remaining unsold passed to the infant's heir-at-law or to his legal personal representative:—Held: the real estate passed to the legal personal representative of the infant as personalty.—Re WRAGG, WRAGG v. SMALL (1890), 33 L. T. 219.

1135. —Previously to his marriage a husband executed two deeds in England, by the first of which he transferred certain mtges. of freehold hereditaments in Sierra Leone, & granted certain freehold hereditaments in Australia to trustees, upon trust for himself until the marriage, & afterwards upon trust to sell the same with the joint consent of himself & his wife, & to hold the proceeds of sale, & also the rents & profits until sale, upon the trusts declared concerning the same by the second deed, which was of even date with the first. The first deed contained a proviso that until the premises were sold the settlor & his wife, during their joint lives, & the survivor, after the death of either, should be permitted to reside in & enjoy all or any of the premises rent free. The second deed recited the first, & declared that the trustees should invest the proceeds of the sale of the settled premises, & should, during the joint lives of the husband & wife, pay the interest, dividends, & annual produce thereof to the wife for her separate use, & after her death to the settlor for life, & then in trust for the issue of the marriage, but it contained no express trust of the rents & profits of the settled premises until sale. A separation took place soon after the marriage, & the wife filed a bill to have the trusts of the deed executed:—Held: the wife was entitled to the rents until sale, inasmuch as there was an absolute conversion in equity of the real estate, & the rents must be held to pass under the words "annual produce."—RAINY v. ELLIS (1872), 27 L. T. 403, L. J.

1136. — Rents received as personalty.]—Realty was settled upon trust to pay the rent to A. for life, & immediately after her death to sell & invest & to pay the dividends of the trust stock to B. for life, with limitations over of the corpus of the trust stock. A. died leaving B. surviving, who died about a year after A. The land was sold without undue delay after A.'s death but not till after the death of B. The rents received between the death of A. & B. produced more than 4 per cent. on the amount realised on the sale:—Held: notwithstanding the absence of any power to postpone the sale or any direction as to the interim rents, the whole rents between the deaths of A. & B. belonged to B.'s personal estate.—

1141. Sale postponed beyond period allowed by testator—Rents accruing after limit of postponement to be distributed as capital.]—A testator devised & bequeathed the residue of his property upon trust for conversion; but the trustees were empowered to postpone conversion for a period not exceeding 21 years. Until conversion & reinvestment the income of unsold property was to be applied in paying debts & yearly charges, & the surplus accumulated in augmentation of capital. At the end of the 21 years a portion of the estate which had, in accordance with a power in his will, been let on mining lease for forty years was still unconverted:—Held: the rents & royalties accrued since the expiration of the 21 years formed part of the capital of the residuary estate, & ought to be distributed accordingly, & until sale or conversion the tenants for life of settled shares were entitled as from such date to receive out of the accrued & accruing rents & royalties such an annual sum as, in the opinion of the ct., would be a fair equivalent for the annual income which would have been received if the property had been sold at the end of the 21 years.

The trustees in the exercise of their discretion postponed the conversion. But on the expiration of that period the whole of the estate ought to have been converted & invested & ready for division (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

In the case of income-producing property directed by will to be converted, but retained for a time unconverted for the benefit of the estate, it has been the practice of the ct. to put a value on the property, & to allow the tenant for life out of the income actually produced a sum equal to 4 per cent. on such value (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—WENTWORTH v. WENTWORTH, [1900] A. C. 163; 69 L. J. P. C. 13; 81 L. T. 682; 16 T. L. R. 81, P. C.

1142. Trust for sale after death of life tenant—Surplus income accumulated during life tenancy—Whether subject to conversion.]—A testator gave all his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust, after payment of his just debts, etc., to pay & apply the whole, or any part of the rents, issues & profits of his real & personal estate & effects for & towards the maintenance, attendance & comfort of S. during his life, giving him the use & enjoyment of his household goods & furniture; & after his decease, upon trust to sell the same real & personal estate, & treat the produce as personal estate; & his will was that the rents & profits of the real estate until sale should be deemed to be part of the annual income of his personal estate, & subject to the disposition therein made thereof; & he then proceeded to dispose of the personal estate. Part of the income of the real & personal estate was applied during the life of S., who was incapable of managing his own affairs, for his maintenance, attendance & comfort, & at his death there was a considerable fund arising from the surplus income:—Held: so much of the savings as arose from rents & profits during the life of S. were not by the will converted into personalty, but must go as real estate to the heir-at-law of testator.—Re SANDERSON'S TRUST (1857), 3 K. & J. 497; 26 L. 1142a. Under conversion by contract of sale—Rents between death of vendor & completion.]

—By a contract for the sale of an estate, it was agreed that the purchase should be completed on a certain day, but that all rent to accrue in the interim, should belong to the vendor, his heirs, exors., & administrators. The vendor died intestate before the day appointed for completing the purchase:—Held: rent accrued between that day & the vendor's death, belonged to his heir.—SHADFORTH v. One of the trustees was testator's heir; & he & his co-trustees sold part of the estates shortly after testator's death. The heir then died; & after his death, it appeared that the persons who were the heirs of S. & M., at their respective deaths, had died in testator's lifetime, & consequently, the trusts declared in their favour failed:—Held: (1) testator's real estates were not absolutely converted by his will into personalty, but only for the purpose expressed therein, & that purpose having failed, they descended to his heir; (2) the proceeds of that part of the estate which had been sold by testator's heir & his co-trustees was sold under an erroneous impression that one or more of the intended cestuis que trust might be in existence, & consequently, those proceeds also must be considered as part of the real estates of the heir.—*DAVENPORT v. 1172. General rule—Property passes as unconverted—Illegal purpose.]—If a testator devised land for purposes altogether illegal, or which altogether fail, the heir takes it as undisposed of; so if he bequeath personalty under the same circumstances, the next of kin are entitled. If a testator devise land for purposes which are in part illegal, or which partially fail, or which require part only of the land devised, the heir takes the part which fails, or is not required for the purposes of the will; & so conversely, in the case of personal estate, the next of kin are entitled.

A testator directed his exors. immediately to lay out £30,000 in the purchase of an estate in his name, the income of which he settled to one for life, with remainder to others in tail, with remainder to a charity; the money was not actually laid out previous to the estate for life & the estates tail being spent. The gift of the charity failing by reason of Mortmain Act, & the estates tail not having been barred:—Held: the next of kin & not the heir-at-law, were entitled to the £30,000.—*COGAN v. 1185. ————.]—A testator devised his freehold, copyhold, & leasehold estates upon trust for sale, the proceeds & the accumulations to be invested, & also his residuary personal estate in like manner, during the life of A., a person of unsound mind, after providing an annuity for A. After A.'s death, without having recovered, upon trust for certain legatees. By an unattested codicil, testator directed all the legacies in his will & codicil to be paid; but if the legacies were more than the property would yield, then the legatees were to be paid less, or wait till the decease of A. Testator also named B., C., S. & D., already named as legatees in the will, his residuary legatees:—Held: all the legacies were payable out of the proceeds of the copyholds, & the residuary as well as the general legatees were entitled to resort to such proceeds.—*WILDES v. he directed that the £6,000 & interest should form part of his residuary personal estate, & directed the residue to be invested in the purchase of land, of which the trustees were to accumulate the rents in a manner which in part was void under the above Act:—Held: that part of the interest as to which the directions to accumulate were void went to the next of kin of the testator, & did not sink into the estates on which it was charged, or go to his heir.—*SIMMONS v. 1190. ————.]—A testator gave all his real & personal estates to trustees upon trust for sale, & directed them to invest the moneys arising therefrom for the benefit of his daughters for life, & to pay his daughters the interest thereof for their lives, & after the death of each daughter, he directed one half of her share to go to her children, & the interest of the other half to be paid to such children for their lives. There was then a limitation over of the interest of the last mentioned moiety to the great grandchildren of testator, which was clearly void for remoteness:—Held: testator's daughters did not take an absolute interest in the shares which were thus undisposed of; & the heir-at-law of testator, was entitled to so much of such shares as was the produce of real estate.—WHITEHEAD v. BENNETT (1853), 1 Eq. Rep. 560; 21 L. T. O. S. 178; 18 Jur. 140; 1 W. R. 406.

1191. ————.]—Under a devise, previously to the operation of Law of Inheritance Amendment Act, 1833 (c. 106), to trustees, one being testator's heir-at-law, upon trust, subject to certain prior estates, for conversion, the trust for conversion being void for remoteness, the equitable reversionary interest thus left undisposed of results as part of the old use, & descends to the heir in his character of heir; & does not so merge in his legal interest under the devise to him as a trustee, as to break the descent & constitute him a fresh stock from which, on decease intestate, the descent is to be traced.

Testator never made it personal estate. It is true, he made it personal estate for certain purposes, which failed; but, if those purposes cannot be satisfied, he has expressed no intention about it. It goes back to testator, & passes to the heir; & even when the land has been sold for the purposes of the will, as to any portion not well given, equity looks on it as passing in its original character to the heir (WOOD, V.-C.).—*BUCHANAN v. 1197. ——— Direction to whom money should go.]—Testator gave real estates to be sold, & the produce to be considered as part of his personal estate; & thereout & out of his personal estate gave legacies to his next of kin, heir & others; he gave other estates to be sold & the produce to be considered from thenceforth as other part of his personal estate & to be disposed of in manner following; he then gave legacies, & some estates specifically & other legacies out of his trust moneys & personal estate; & gave his exor. £1,000 to be disposed of according to any instructions he might leave in writing; & gave all the residue of his goods & chattels, personal estate & effects, whatsoever, subject to debts, legacies, etc. No instructions being found:—Held: the heir was entitled to the £1,000.

I am perfectly satisfied that where the ct. has no direction from testator to whom the money arising from any part of his real estate shall go, it rests with the heir-at-law (LORD LOUGHBOROUGH, C.).—COLLINS v. WAKEMAN (1795), 2 Ves. 683; 30 E. R. 841, L. C.

1199. ——— Not declaration against lapse to heir.]—A testatrix by will gave real estate to trustees in trust to sell, & to stand possessed of the proceeds as a fund of personal & not real estate, & declared that such proceeds, or any part thereof, should not in any event lapse for the benefit of her heir-at-law. After giving several legacies out of such proceeds, testatrix declared that the trustees should pay & apply the residue to such persons & for such uses as she should by any codicil direct. Testatrix died without making any codicil to her will:—Held: the declaration that such proceeds should be personal estate, & the exclusion of the heir-at-law, raised no gift by implication in favour of the next of kin; & consequently, the heir-at-law was entitled to the surplus proceeds as undisposed of by the will.—*FITCH v. 1200. ——— Property taken away from heir.]—(1) A testator devised real estate to trustees upon trust to sell the same, & declared that the moneys to arise from the sale thereof should sink into, & be deemed part of the residue of his personal estate, & be applied accordingly; & he bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate to the same trustees, upon trust, for seven of his children by name, share & share alike; one of the children died in the lifetime of testator:—Held: the lapsed share of the proceeds of the sale of the real estate went to the heir-at-law, & not to the next of kin of testator.

(2) If a testator directs a sale of his real & personal estate, & the proceeds to form a mixed fund, the heir-at-law, in the event of a gift of any portion of that mixed fund not taking effect, will be entitled to so much as was the proceeds of the real estate, upon the principle that the heir-at-law cannot be disinherited unless the property was given away from him.

(3) The ct., where it has no direction from a testator to whom money arising from the sale of part of his real estate shall go, will give it to his heir-at-law.

(4) The meaning of a direction to sell real estates, & that the proceeds shall form part of the personal estate, is that, so far as the intention of testator can be carried out, the conversion takes effect according to the direction of the will; but where the object fails the direction does not take effect. In case of lapse, the personal estate does not go to the next of kin because testator intended it, but because the law carries it to them. So, as to the real estate the law gives it to the heir; & the law would do the same if testator had said that his real estate should not go to his heir, but had omitted to make a valid devise of it.—TAYLOR v. TAYLOR (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 190; 1 Eq. Rep. 239; 22 L. J. Ch. 742; 21 L. T. O. S. 213; 17 Jur. 583; 1 W. R. 398; 43 E. R. 76, L. C.

1217. ———.]—By his will testator devised his real & leasehold estates to the use of trustees upon trust to let the same until the time thereafter appointed for the sale thereof & to apply the rents & profits meanwhile upon the same trusts as those upon which the proceeds of sale of his personal estate were thereafter given. He then gave his personal estate to his trustees upon trust to sell such parts as did not consist of money or satisfactory securities for money & to invest the proceeds & to stand possessed of the income of his residuary personal estate & of the rents & profits of his real & leasehold estates upon trust to divide the same among eight tenants for life or the survivors of them or the survivor other than H. Testator then declared that from & after the death of the last survivor other than H. his real & personal estate should be sold & converted at such time or times as his trustees should think fit & that his trustees should hold the proceeds of sale upon trusts which failed by reason of the death of H. in 1876 before any of the other tenants for life. Testator's heir-at-law died in 1882 & the last of the tenants for life in 1917:—Held: the objects for which the sale was directed had in the result completely failed & no conversion was effected & testator's real estate devolved upon the heir-at-law as real estate & passed on the heir-at-law's death to his heir. This £500 was never paid to the trustees, but remained in the hands of the husband at the death of the wife. She having made no appointment, this £500 vested in her heir-at-law, subject to the life interest of the husband, but the heir took it as money, & therefore at her death this interest passed to his personal representatives.—*RUSSELL v. SECT. 6.—SURPLUS AFTER SATISFACTION OF PURPOSE OF CONVERSION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1237. General rule—Land to be sold for particular purpose—Surplus proceeds pass as land.—Properly, nothing is the personal estate of a testator, that was not so at his death; he may so express himself as to show something else intended; but where there is nothing but a direction to sell land with an application of the money to a particular purpose, there is no instance of holding the surplus, after that purpose answered, to form part of the personal estate, so as to pass by the residuary bequest.—MAUGHAM v. MASON (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 410; 35 E. R. 159.

The land shall not be turned into personal estate, nor more sold than is necessary to pay the legacies, & the heir shall have the surplus.—RANDALL v. BOOKBY (1701), 2 Vern. 425; Prec. #### SUB-SECT. 2.—SALE BY ORDER OF COURT.

1251. Surplus proceeds of sale—Retain character of land.]—A. being seised in fee of an estate subject to a term for raising £5,000 for B., made a devise, in general terms, sufficient to comprise the estate. Afterwards, part of it was sold for the remainder of the term for £7,600, under a decree for raising the £5,000; & A. sold the reversion to the purchaser for a further sum; & an assignment & conveyance were made to complete the sales. The £5,000 was paid to B. out of the £7,600; but the surplus remained in ct. until long after A.'s death:—Held: as an excessive sale had been made under the decree, the surplus retained the character of real estate, & notwithstanding the assignment & conveyance, the devise remained unrevoked with respect to it.—JERMY v. PRESTON (1842), 13 Sim. 356; 60 E. R. 138.

1252. — Administration action.]—Subject to the debts, etc., real estates were devised to A. They were all sold in an administration suit, to which the devisee was a party. After payment of the debts, etc., there remained a sum in ct. at the death of the devisee:—Held: it was of the character of real estate, & passed to her heir.—*COOKE v. 1253. — Conversion absolute—Passes as personalty.]—A testator gave the residue of his real & personal estate to his three sisters as tenants in common, & he empowered his exor. to sell all or any part of his real estate, & to stand possessed of the clear proceeds upon trust to pay his debts, funeral & testamentary expenses, & legacies, & to hold the residue in trust for his three sisters as tenants in common, & to pay & divide the same accordingly. A portion of the real estate was sold under an order of the ct., with the concurrence of the testator's sisters, for the purpose of paying off a mtge. on another part of the estate. The purchase-money was paid into ct. The mtge. did not exhaust the proceeds of the sale:—Held: the conversion was absolute, & the surplus was personal estate.—CROWTHER v. BRADNEY (1873), 28 L. T. 464.

of real estate is rightfully directed by the ct. for a particular purpose, as for payment of the costs of a suit, it effects conversion for all purposes, & there is no equity in favour of the heir-at-law of the owner to have the surplus proceeds of sale reconverted.

It is established that an order of the ct. rightfully made for the sale of an estate operates as a conversion from the date of the order, so that the proceeds of sale are personality (FARWELL, L.J.).—BURGESS v. BOOTH, [1908] 2 Ch. 648; 78 L. J. Ch. 32; 99 L. T. 677, C. A.

PART IX. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 2.

*m. Surplus proceeds of sale—Conversion absolute—Pass as realty.]—*In a mtgee.'s suit for foreclosure & sale against L., the owner in fee of the mortgaged lands, a decree was made that, in default of payment within the usual time, the mortgaged lands, or a competent part thereof, should be sold, & that out of the proceeds of the sale pltf.'s mtge., & certain other incumbrances, should be paid off, & the remainder, if any, should be paid to L.; & that if any part of the mortgaged lands should remain unsold, the same should be re-conveyed to L. More than a competent part of the lands were sold, & a surplus remained after payment of pltf. in that suit & the other incumbrances. L. made two applications to the ct. as to the investment of this surplus fund: & the second of these applications, which was to have the fund invested in govt. stock, was granted, & the fund so invested. No further proceeding was ever taken as to the fund until the present action, & the dividends on the stock had been from time to time lodged by the Accountant-General to the credit of the Equity Exch. suit. L. was long since dead. An action having been brought by L.'s administrator de bonis non for administration, & claiming the fund in ct. as his personal estate as against the heir-at-law of L.—Held: the capital of the fund was to be deemed a portion of the real estate of L., & to have descended as such to his heir-at-law.—SCOTT v. SCOTT (1882), 9 L. 11. Ir. 367.—IR.

& she directed that the net money should form part of her personal estate; &, for those & every other purpose connected with her property, whether real or personal, she invested A. & B. & the survivor of them & his heirs, exors. & administrators, with her full authority; & she directed that any undisposed of surplus of moneys should be paid as she should, by any future writing or will, direct. She did not, however, make any future writing or will. After her death A. & B. sold her real estates. Her personal estate was sufficient to pay her debts & legacies:—Held: her heir, & not her next of kin, was entitled to the moneys produced by the sale.—*FLINT v. ## PART IX. SECT. 8.

n. Disposal directed by will.—A testator by his will directed that his trustees should in certain events, after the death of his wife & daughter, sell all his estate, real & personal, & divide the same equally amongst his "own right heirs" who might prove their relationship, etc.:—Held: the conversion directed created a blended fund derived from realty & personality,

Sect. 8.—Proceeds of sale of realty blended with personality. Sect. 9: Sub-sects. 1 & 2, A.]

1269. ———.]—Testator devised & bequeathed his real & personal estate, in trust to sell, & constituted a mixed blended fund. He thereout gave B. £100 & one-eighteenth of the residue, & he gave the remaining portions of the residue to other persons. B. died in testator's lifetime:—Held: the next of kin & heir were entitled to their proportionate part of the lapsed share of the residue, & the legacy of £100 fell into the residue & passed by the gift thereof.—SALT v. CHATTAWAY (1841), 3 Beav. 576; 10 L. J. Ch. 234; 49 E. R. 227.

Annotation:—Reid. Simmons v. Rose (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 411.

1270. ———.]—Testator devised freehold estates upon trust to sell, with a declaration that the moneys to arise from such sale should be deemed part of his personal estate, & that the income thereof, till sale, should be considered as part of the income of his personal estate, & be subject to the disposition of his personal estate thereinafter made. Testator then gave his personal estate upon trust for four persons, as tenants in common. By a codicil, testator revoked the residuary gift to one of the four, who was also testator's heir-at-law & customary heir:—Held: the heir was entitled to so much of the lapsed residue as consisted of real estate.—GORDON v. ATKINSON (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 478; 63 E. R. 1156.

All four children were infants, & one of them, A., had recently died:—Held: as the income & capital were the subjects of distinct gifts, & as there was no gift of income, except for maintenance, until A. should attain 21, his fourth share of the residue did not vest, but lapsed, & so far as it was constituted by realty would go to the heir-at-law, so far as it was constituted by personality, to the next of kin of testator.—*SPENCER v. 1275. ———.]—Testator gave the residue of his freehold & copyhold hereditaments to trustees upon trust for sale, & he directed that the moneys to arise from such sale should be deemed part of his personal estate, & that the rents & profits of any hereditaments remaining unsold should be deemed to be annual income of his personal estate, & that the same moneys, rents & profits should be subject to the disposition thereinafter made concerning the annual income thereof respectively; & as touching his personal estate, he gave the same upon trust to pay certain legacies. The residue was undisposed of:—Held: there was a common fund for the payment of debts & legacies; & the respective residues of the proceeds of the real & personal estates belonged respectively to the heir-at-law & next of kin.—SIMMONS v. ROSE (1856), 21 Beav. 37; 6 De G. M. & G. 411; 25 L. J. Ch. 615; 26 L. T. O. S. 265; 2 Jur. N. S. 73; 4 W. R. 225; 43 E. R. 1292, L. C.

will, by which he made a provision for his wife in satisfaction of the provision made for her by the settlement; & devised all his real estates to trustees in trust to convey them to certain of his relations for their lives, successively, with remainders to their first & other sons in tail male & ultimately, to his own right heirs: & he gave £80,000 to the same trustees, & directed them to invest it in land & to settle the land in the same manner as he had directed his real estate to be settled:—Held: he had elected to treat & had treated the £32,000 as part of his personal estate, & it remained personalty at his death.

I take the law upon this case to be perfectly clear where, by a settlement, land has been agreed to be converted into money, or money to be converted into land, a character is imposed upon it, until somebody entitled to take it in either form, chooses to elect that, instead of its being converted into money or instead of its being converted into land, it shall remain in the form in which it is actually found. There can be no doubt that that is the law; & the only question in each particular case, is whether there have been acts sufficient to enable the ct. to say that the party has so determined. I confess that, in this case, it seems to me that there is a superfluity of circumstances which show, perfectly clearly & incontrovertibly, that H. intended to take the funds which represented the £32,000 as money & not as land. It was argued that there must be an intention strictly to convert; that is to say, that, knowing that the money was impressed with the character of land, the party must say: "I mean that it shall no longer be land, but it shall be in its actual form of money." I do not, however, think that that is the correct view of the law. It is quite sufficient if the ct. sees that the party means it to be taken in the state in which it actually is. Whether he did or did not know that, but for some election by him, it would be turned into land, is quite immaterial. If, being money, the party absolutely entitled, indicated that he wished to deal with it as money, & that it should be considered as money, whether he knew or did not know that, but for that wish, it would have gone as land, appears to me to be wholly immaterial (LORD CRANWORTH, V.-C.).—*HARCOURT v. By a deed in pursuance of Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 18), which was executed by the tenant for life, the husband & the wife, but not acknowledged by the wife, the lands were conveyed in fee to a railway co. The purchase-money was invested in Consols, & the dividends paid to the tenant for life. The husband died, then the wife died, having bequeathed her personalty by will, but intestate as to real estate; & lastly, the tenant for life died. Upon the death of the tenant for life, the heir-at-law of the wife claimed the fund as realty:—Held: the heir-at-law could not claim the fund as realty, inasmuch as he did not seek to impeach the conveyance to the co., but only to impress upon the purchase-money the character of land.

(2) The sale to the co. having been treated by all parties as valid, & the purchase-money having been dealt with by those who claimed under the wife as money:—Held: the legatees under the wife's will were entitled to the fund & not the heir-at-law.—*COOPER v. 1296. — Election by Crown—Bona vacantia.]—A testator who was possessed of freeholds devised all his property to his wife for life, & appointed trustees & exors., but made no further disposition. The trustees of the will were appointed trustees for the purpose of Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), & the widow sold portions of the land & paid the purchase-money to the trustees. On the death of the widow, there being no heir-at-law or next of kin of testator:—Held: the proceeds of sale did not belong to the trustees beneficially, but went to the Crown as bona vacantia.

Here there is no direction to sell, & the money is money in the hands of the trustees unless there is a reconversion, & the Crown, as representing the heir, instead of requiring it to be reconverted, requires it as money. The wife predeceased testator, & the surviving trustees were admitted as customary tenants of the cottages. Testator left three sons & a daughter; the latter married & had issue, who were infants. Pursuant to a verbal arrangement amongst themselves, in which agreement the daughter's husband had concurred, but to which the trustees were no parties, the cestuis que trust agreed to keep the cottages unconverted; & the rents were received by the trustees, & divided amongst them:—Held: inasmuch as one of the cestuis que trust was a married woman & had issue who were infants, no election could be made to take the cottages in their actual state, & so determine & extinguish the converting trust.—*SPENCER v. time after his death as to his trustees should seem most expedient, to sell, & to hold the proceeds in trust for his sons W., F., H. & G., if & when they should attain the age of 21 years, in equal shares. F. predeceased testator, & his share therefore lapsed & devolved upon W. as heir-at-law of testator. H. attained 21, but died intestate & unmarried, leaving his mother E. & his surviving brothers W. & G. his next of kin. G. attained 21 but died, having by his will given all his real & personal estate to W. W. was subsequently found a lunatic by inquisition, & remained of unsound mind until his death, intestate, & without next of kin or heir-at-law. Letters of administration to his personal estate had been taken out by the Solr. to the Treasury. The real estate devised by testator remained unsold at the time of W.'s death, & an action was brought to ascertain the persons entitled thereto. The representatives of the trustees, as the persons upon whom the legal estate had devolved, contended that, as there had been no conversion of the real estate into personalty, the Crown was not entitled through the Solr. to the Treasury to come in & insist that the real estate should be treated as converted; that there being an absolute discretion to postpone the sale for an indefinite period, that which was a trust had been cut down to a mere power of sale; & that, as there had been a failure of the cestuis que trust, the trustees were entitled to retain for their own benefit the property, or the undivided shares thereof, to which W. was entitled at his death:—Held: the trust for conversion was absolute, & had not been displaced by the discretion to postpone, inasmuch as the several parties interested had not at any time been all competent to agree to a reconversion; the real estate must still be treated as personal estate; & the Solr. to the Treasury, as administrator of the lunatic, did not stand in any different position to any other administrator, & was entitled to the beneficial interest of W. in the real estate.—Re HEATHCOTE, GILBERT v. The purchase was made accordingly, afterwards E., the only surviving child, died unmarried, but had attained the age of 21, the absolute proprietor of these estates. E. having taken them as land in her lifetime, & done acts to show she intended they should be considered as real estate:—Held: they must be held as such & go to the heir.

It must be allowed equity follows the contracts of parties, in order to preserve their intent, by carrying it into execution, & depends on this principle, that what has been agreed to be done for valuable consideration is considered as done, & holds in every case except in dower; & therefore where money is to be laid out in land, there the

ct. will make it have the property of land; the same rule of lands to be converted into money (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).

I am of opinion that E. had a right to elect even during the mother's life, & that she might have come into this ct. to compel the trustees to sell this reversion for her benefit, even in the mother's lifetime; & though she had this right, yet instead of doing this she makes leases of the lands, reserving rent to her, her heirs & assigns. Testator died in Oct. 1794, & left five children, four of them subsequently died, leaving E. the survivor, who also died in 1854. In the year 1805 a lease of the estate was executed by the five children, who had all attained their ages of 21 years, to two persons as lessees for a term of six years, at a proper rent. At the expiration of this lease the lessees continued for a considerable time as occupants, & the rent reserved was divided by & amongst the five children. The B. 1369. — Directions to prepare conveyance.]—A testator devised & bequeathed real & personal estate to trustees for his wife for life, & after her death, as to one freehold house, upon trust for one of his sons for life, as to another freehold house upon trust for his daughter for life, & as to a third freehold house upon trust for another son for life, & after their respective deaths to their issue respectively, & after the respective deaths of any without issue he directed his trustees to sell the house of such child & to pay the proceeds of sale to the survivors or survivor of his three children, & until sale to pay the rents to the same persons or person, & he gave his residuary real & personal estate to such of his three children as should survive the widow. One of the sons predeceased the widow, a bachelor. The daughter survived her & died intestate in 1877, & all her property passed to her surviving brother as her sole next of kin. The houses were let to weekly tenants, & the surviving son, since 1877, received all the rents. He died in 1885, & shortly before his death he handed the title deeds of the houses to a solicitor, directing that a gift of all his property should be made to a niece, but he died before a conveyance could be executed. The question then arose whether the will had effected a conversion of the realty, & if so, whether the surviving son had elected to take the property as real estate:—Held: there had been an out-and-out conversion, & the son must be taken to have elected to take the houses as real estate.—POTTER v. DUDENEY (1887), 56 L. T. 395; sub nom. Re POTTER, 3 T. L. R. 420.

1370. — (1) Where real estate is bequeathed in the character of personality, & is enjoyed unconverted by the legatee, slight circumstances are sufficient to raise a presumption that he has elected to retain it as realty. In the absence of any other circumstances, the fact that a person has, for a great length of time, preserved the property in its actual state, will be sufficient to induce the ct. to come to this conclusion.

(2) A. being entitled to an undivided share in a real estate, impressed with the character of personality, retained possession for between two & three years, & died without having said or done anything to indicate an intention to reconvert:—Held: at his death it was personality.—*DIXON v. Payment of charges—Debts & legacies.]—A testatrix gave her real & personal estate to three trustees, upon trust, as soon as they, in their discretion, should think most advantageous, to sell & convert into money her real estate, & pay her debts & legacies. She gave the residue of her estate & effects to her son J.:—Held: (1) J. took the residue of the realty in the character of personality.

A., who was one of the trustees, paid the debts & legacies, except one annuity, & remained in possession sixteen years & died intestate:—Held: (2) having regard to his acts & notwithstanding he was both co-trustee & owner, the property was reconverted into realty, & passed to his heir.—GRIEBBACH v. FREMANTLE (1853), 17 Beav. 314; 51 E. R. 1055.

1372. — Legacy.]—The H. P. estate was vested in H., D. & S., upon trust after the death of a person who died in Aug. 1863, to sell with all convenient speed. The proceeds of sale belonged as to one moiety to D.'s wife absolutely for her separate use, subject to a charge of £500 to a legatee, & as to the other moiety to S. absolutely. The property was well adapted for building purposes, but the bulk of it was subject to an old lease of which 26 years were unexpired. In Mar. 1864, D. & wife paid off the £500. In 1864, the three trustees let for three years part of the to form part of his residuary estate; & directed his said trustees to stand possessed of his freehold lands in K. & M., & all the rest & residue of his estate at their discretion to sell same, & out of the proceeds to pay his debts & funeral & testamentary expenses, & then to set aside so much capital as would be sufficient to meet certain annual payments, & to apply the balance in clearing off certain charges, & left all the rest & residue property not comprised in the old lease, & in 1867, & again in 1869, D. & S., who had survived H., granted similar leases for three years. In 1865, S., who was the acting trustee & managed the property, had plans prepared by a surveyor for laying out the property for building. In the same year a bill was brought into Parliament for authorising a railway to pass through the estate, & a petition against it was presented on behalf of "the owners & trustees of the H. P. estate," which stated that it was their intention to lay out the estate for building. Mrs. D. died in 1870, in the lifetime of her husband. There was no direct evidence that she had concurred in the leases, the preparation of the plans, or the petition to Parliament:—Held: the parties had elected to take the property as real estate, & Mrs. D.'s share went to her heir-at-law as realty, & not to her husband as personalty.—*Re DAVIDSON, MARTIN v. life or widowhood, &, after her death or second marriage, upon trust to divide the trust funds equally between such of his children as should be living at his death, & the issue of such of them as might be then dead. Testator died in 1869. The wife & two infant children survived him. There were no issue of any deceased child. Both the children died before the wife, unmarried, & intestate, the one who died last dying in 1876. The wife did not marry again, & she died in 1885 intestate. The only real estate of the testator was a house, of which he had in 1869 agreed to grant a lease for twenty years, with an option to the tenant to purchase the reversion at any time during the term. At the death of the widow this option had not been exercised, & the house had not been sold by the trustees. After the deaths of the children the widow continued in receipt of the rent of the house:—Held: by reason of the tenant's option to purchase the house, the widow's continued receipt of the rent was no evidence of an election by her to take the property as real estate, & on her death it descended as personalty to her next of kin.—*Re LEWIS, FOXWELL v. 1379. — Reason for permanent retention.—Reconversion of a remainder.—Mere lapse of time without conversion being effected, if unexplained, coupled with slight reasons for permanent retention as land, may give rise to the inference that it was the intention of the person absolutely entitled to a remainder the subject of a trust for conversion to retain such remainder unconverted.—*SMITH v. The indenture contained powers of exchange & partition; & it was declared that until the sale the trustee should hold the lands upon trust as to one moiety for L. & as to the other moiety of his property to his sister H. absolutely. The testator died in 1893. The testator's mother died in 1911:—Held: the real estate of the for S. for her separate use. By articles of agreement made in the following month, it was agreed that the trustee should allot the lands described in the first schedule to L., & those described in the second schedule to S., & should stand possessed of the allotments upon the same trusts as were by the deed of Mar. 1862, declared of the respective moieties, but without prejudice to the powers vested in the trustee by that indenture. S. was a married woman, & her husband was an alien. By her will, made in Aug. 1862, she gave all her landed property situated at E., being her allotment under the articles of agreement, which still remained unsold, to her husband for life, with remainder over:—Held: (1) the trust for sale had been put an end to by the agreement of Apr. 1862; (2) the property passed as real estate under the will of S.; (3) if the trust for sale had been still subsisting, S. had elected to take the property as real estate.—*SHARP v. 1384. — Land devised in strict settlement.]—A person contingently entitled to the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold may, pending the contingency, elect to take the estate as realty, & such election will become operative upon the contingency happening before or upon his death.

A testator devised his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale & conversion, & out of the income of the moneys arising therefrom to pay an annuity of £750 to his widow during widowhood, & subject thereto to pay the residue during such widowhood to his son, G., unless & until he did any act to deprive himself of the whole or any part thereof, & in case his estate determined, upon trust to pay the income to the widow during such widowhood, & after her death or second marriage, as to one moiety of the capital for G. absolutely, & as to the other moiety, in case his estate had not determined, then upon trust for G., his heirs, exors. & administrators; but in case it should have determined, then upon certain trusts in favour of G., his wife & children. G. during his life resided with his mother on part of the devised estates in Sussex, & died in the lifetime of his mother without having done any act whereby his estate determined, having by his will devised the Sussex estate in strict settlement, & bequeathed his personalty upon trust for his children equally at 21 or marriage:—Held: G. had the right to elect to take the Sussex estate as realty, & he had done enough in his lifetime & by his will to show that he intended to elect so to take it, & the property was therefore part of his real estate.—*MEER v. 1385. Evidence of intention to retain estate in possession.—Whether extended to estate in reversion.]—Real estate converted by will into personalty continues as such in the absence of specific acts restoring the character of realty; & acts affecting part of a residuary estate which was in possession will not extend, by implication, to other part of such residuary estate which was in reversion.

Residuary real estate directed by will to be sold comprised freehold in possession & copyhold in reversion. The legatee entitled to the surplus purchase-money to arise from the estates when sold, paid a sum of £1,000 directed to be set apart, & took possession of the estate & enjoyed the freehold as realty, & finally devised them as such. The copyhold reversion did not fall into possession until after the death of the legatee:—Held: the acts which amounted to a reconversion of the freehold in possession did not extend to the copyhold in reversion; it remained personalty, & passed to the personal representatives, & not to the heir of the legatee.—MEREDITH v. VICK (1857), 23 Beav. 559; 27 L. J. Ch. 162; 29 L. T. O. S. 340; 3 Jur. N. S. 1234; 5 W. R. 639; 53 E. R. 220.

She also directed that the appointed property should not be sold during the lifetime of her husband without his consent. The real estate in question remained unsold at the date of the death of the testatrix:—Held: (1) the will did not operate as a reconversion of the appointed property, & the property passed on the death of the testatrix as personalty; (2) the estate duty payable in respect thereof was a first charge on the property; (3) such estate duty was not thrown upon the residue by the direction for payment of the testamentary expenses.—*O'GRADY v. 1404. Conversion dependent on happening of event—Election before event.]—STEAD v. NEWDIGATE, No. 776, ante.

1405. ———.]—By his marriage settlement, dated in 1845, the settlor settled certain real estates upon trust for himself for life & after his death upon trust for sale, & he directed that the proceeds of sale should be held upon trust to pay an annual sum to his wife for life, & that £10,000 should be held upon trust for such purposes as he should by will appoint, & that the residue should be held upon trust for his children, & if there should be no child, upon trust for himself, "his exors., administrators, & assigns." The settlor's wife died in 1901. The settlor made no appointment of the £10,000, & died in 1905 without ever having had any issue. By his will, dated in 1901, testator appointed & devised his "interest" in the estates to his "successor in fee" & by a codicil to his will dated in 1902 he appointed the "estates" to his nephew, who was his successor. Under a deed of compromise approved by the Ct. of Probate the estates were conveyed to testator's successor:—Held: (1) the estates were unconverted by the settlement, there being no enforceable trust for sale, & therefore they passed as realty under the settlor's will; (2) the settlor had by his will & codicil elected to deal with the estates as realty, & they devolved as such.—*Re GRIMTHORPE (LORD), BECKETT v. When property is converted, equity will recall it for the representative, if done by breach of trust, not if by accident, the ct., or the tort of a stranger; but on account of its consequence & difficulty of reversing the order made on petition, the ct. refused to give it to either representative without a bill.—Ex p. BROMFIELD (1792), 1 Ves. 453; 3 Bro. C. C. 510; Dick. 762; 30 E. R. 434

Upon the death of the lunatic, who never recovered:—Held: the value of the lands was part of the personal estate of the lunatic at his death & liable to probate duty.

The principles on which the ct. acts in dealing with the property of lunatics under its care are not open to question. The leading principle, the paramount consideration, is the interest of the lunatic. Consistently with that principle it is settled that in the ordinary course of managing a lunatic's estate the ct. pays no regard to the interests or expectations of those who may come after, but it is equally well settled that in matters outside the ordinary course of management, it is the duty of the ct. so far as may be possible not to alter the character of the lunatic's property, or to interfere with any rights of succession (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—*A.-G. v. ## Part X.—Election.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1411. Election distinguished from double portions.]—(1) The question was, whether General Pulteney did or did not intent to comprise in the will an estate, of which he supposed himself the owner. To prove he did, the steward's accounts & a settlement, as drawn out by him of the state of his property, were offered in evidence, & admitted.

(2) The cases of double portions have no analogy to election: it is true they involve election, but they do not depend upon election.—PULTENEY v. DARLINGTON (LORD) (1776), cited 3 Ves. at p. 529; 30 E. R. 1141.

1412. Practice in equity—Not rule of positive law.]—SPREAD v. MORGAN, No. 1686, post.

1413. Disposal of property of another—Gift to owner of property disposed of.]—(1) A. by marriage settlement provided an annuity for the eldest son of the marriage; he afterwards by his will gave to the eldest son a real estate for life, with remainders over, & confirmed the settlement:—Held: the eldest son must elect between this provision & the annuity.

This putting a devisee under a will to his election, however just & reasonable it may be, was certainly a strong operation of a ct. of equity, & I agree, the intent of the testator to dispose of that, which is not his, ought to appear upon the will with such explanation however of the prima facie appearance as the law admits; & that it ought to appear by declaration plain or necessary conclusion from the circumstances, & no man ought under pretence of this rule to be spelt or conjectured out of his property. But as on the one hand we are not to do it by conjecture, so on the other we are not to refuse our assent to that moral certainty & demonstration, which in such cases as the present, the general object of both instruments, the nature of the subject, the scope & purview of the will, the observations upon the particular clauses & the force of the expressions construed according to their natural import, may produce (EYRE, LORD COMMISSIONER).

(2) Where a man has subjected his estate to special limitations, or incumbrances, & by his will makes a new disposition of the same estate free & discharged from incumbrances or under different limitations, the incumbrancers, deriving other interests under the will, if they will take by it, must not disappoint it, but must permit the estate to go into the new channel & as free from incumbrances as testator intended (EYRE, LORD COMMISSIONER).

(3) It is the settled doctrine of a ct. of equity that no man shall be allowed to disappoint a will under which he takes a benefit. If a man devises to B. lands to which he has no colour of title, & which are in the possession, or are the inheritance of A. to whom some part of testator's estate, real or personal, is also devised, A. must either renounce to the extent of his own estate, the estate devised or must convey his own estate to B. (EYRE, LORD COMMISSIONER).—BLAKE v. BUNBURY (1792), 1 Ves. 514; 4 Bro. C. C. 21; 30 E. R. 464.

1415. ——— Husband disposes of property of wife.]—Where testator conceiving himself entitled to the property of another person, makes a general disposition of all his estate & gives some benefit to that person, he must elect. Therefore a husband conceiving himself entitled under a void deed to a residue bequeathed to his wife & dying without getting possession, having made such a general disposition by a will, under which she took an interest, it is a case of election; & her election to take the provision under the will, which, though less in point of value, was to her separate use, was established against the assignees under the bkpcy. of her second husband.—RUTTER v. MACLEAN (1799), 4 Ves. 531; 31 E. R. 273.

1417. ———.]—Testator devised the rents of real estate, & bequeathed the interest of a legacy to B. for life, with remainders over. At the date of the will, & at the time of the death of testator, his personal estate, out of which the legacy was to come, was in the hands of B., who became bkpt.

If any property, real or personal, belonging to this lady [B.] had been expressly given by the will, it is clear that, according to the principles of that branch of our law which has been called by the name of "election," she could not have claimed anything under the will, without giving effect to the disposition of her own property made by the will. If this were not so, she would be both claiming under an instrument & in contradiction to it. Now, I can conceive that the point is arguable, that there is no substantial distinction between such a case & the case where part of the general personal estate, given by the will, is in the hands of one of the donees under the will as a debtor, & he takes an interest under the will. But I am not 1418. ———.]—A., a testatrix, having under her marriage settlement power to appoint a fund in favour of the children of the marriage, by her will, in execution of the power, appointed a portion of the fund to her son C. for life, with remainder to such persons as he should by will appoint. There was also a general residuary appointment of the settled fund, subject to all other appointments made thereof, to A.'s daughters, to whom benefits out of A.'s own property were also given by the will:—Held: (1) the appointment in favour of C.'s appointees was void for remoteness, & this portion of the settled fund went to the daughters under the residuary appointment in A.'s will; (2) the rule as to election was applicable only as between a gift under a will & a claim dehors the will & adverse to it, & not as between one clause in a will & another clause in the same will, & therefore, the daughters were not put to their election.

(3) The ordinary principle is clear that if a testator gives property by design or by mistake which is not his to give, & gives at the same time to the real owner of it other property, such real owner cannot take both; & the principle has been applied where the first gift is made purporting to be in execution of a power; so that, if under a power to appoint to children, the donee of the power appoints to grandchildren, which is bad, & the children who are entitled to claim by reason of the badness of the appointment also take under the will other property, the grandchildren are entitled to put them to an election. But to this rule, so far as regards appointments, a notable exception is taken, viz., that when there is an appointment to an object of the power, with directions that the same shall be settled, or upon any trust, or subject to any condition, then the appointment is held to be a valid appointment, & the superadded direction, trust, or condition is void, & not only void, but inoperative to raise any case of election (JAMES, V.-C.).—WOLLASTON v. KING (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 165; 38 L. J. Ch. 61, 392; 20 L. T. 1003; 17 W. R. 641.

1419. ———.]—(1) The rule of Statute of Distributions which requires the conversion of intestate's estate into money is introduced simply for the benefit of creditors, & the facility of division among the next of kin. But, as regards the substantial title to property, the right of the next of kin subject only to the claims of creditors is complete.

(2) A residuary legatee under a will has a clear & tangible interest in the residue, & Statute of Distributions being nothing but a will made by the Legislature for an intestate, his next of kin stand, with regard to his personal estate, in the same condition as does a residuary legatee under a will. Both may therefore be subject to the rule of election. In these respects a creditor does not resemble either.

(3) A married woman cannot declare an election. An inquiry was therefore directed in the case of a married woman, one of two next of kin required to elect, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was for her benefit & the benefit of her children to take under or against a will.

A. gave a certain estate, P. H., together with personal property, to trustees on trust, after his widow's death, to sell & hold the proceeds, with his other property, in trust for any one of his children in such form & manner as his widow, before a certain fixed period, should appoint. A. died, leaving three sons, W., E. & F. Before the expiration of the fixed period the widow executed a deed by which, after disposing of other property, she directed the proceeds of P. H. to be divided equally among the three sons. The deed reserved to her a power of revocation. She afterwards, believing that she still possessed power to dispose of the estate, made a will, by which she gave this estate of P. H. to W., the eldest son, & then, by different successive codicils, gave benefits to the other two sons, & a special legacy to each of the two children of E., the only one of the three sons of the original testator who had married. E. died before his mother, & died intestate. On her death a suit was instituted, in which it was declared that, so far as the estate of P. H. was concerned, her will, which could only speak from the date of her death, & therefore long after the expiration of the period fixed for the making of the appointment, was inoperative. W. then filed a bill to compel the two children of E., & also his youngest brother, F., to elect between their claims under the deed of appointment & under the will & codicils. F. submitted, the two children of E. resisted:—Held: (4) their rights under the deed of appointment, though derived through their father, were exactly the same as were those of F., & they were bound to elect; (5) the special legacies to the two children of E., though given to them by name, & given before his death, must be taken into account together with the interest which they derived through him as his next of kin, the whole of the benefits to be taken under the two titles being subject to election.

(6) A special direction was inserted in the Order of the House as to the mode of taking the account with reference to the administration of the estate of E.

(7) The doctrine of election will be applied notwithstanding the fact that the interest of such next of kin is a bare claim to an unascertained residue out of the proceeds of property after payment of the debts of intestate & usual expenses by the administrator.

(8) Testatrix not owning P. H., & having no disposing power over it, her attempt to dispose of it by her will clearly would raise a case of election against any person who, taking under her will, might be found to have an interest in the P. H. estate (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

(9) The rule of election does not proceed either upon an expressed intention, or upon a conjecture of a presumed intention, but it proceeds on a rule of equity founded upon the highest principles of equity, & as to which the ct. does not occupy itself in finding out whether the rule was present or was not present to the mind of the party making the will (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

(10) There is an obligation on him who takes a benefit under a will or other instrument to give full effect to that instrument under which he takes a benefit; & if it be found that that instrument purports to deal with something which it was beyond the power of the donor or settlor to dispose of, but to which effect can be given by the concurrence of him who receives a benefit under the same instrument, the law will impose on him who takes the benefit the obligation of carrying the instrument into full & complete force & effect (LORD HATHERLEY).—*COOPER v. H., by a voluntary settlement, assigned to trustees several mtge. debts, certain shares in a bank, & some furniture, & directed the trustees to hold the premises & certain consols which had been previously transferred to them, upon trust for herself for life, & then, as to part of the trust premises, for specified beneficiaries; & as to the residue, for M. F. M. F. died in the lifetime of settlor, who in her lifetime received some of the mtge. debts, the others being received by the trustees, & died without having duly transferred the bank shares, but having by her will confirmed the settlement. The settlement being valid as to the consols, the mtge. debts received by the trustees & the furniture, but incomplete as to the mtge. debts received by settlor, & the bank shares:—Held: the confirmation could not operate as to the mtge. debts received by settlor, but notwithstanding that the settlement had not been admitted to probate, the confirmation of it by the will, which had been proved, perfected the settlement with regard to the bank shares as a testamentary instrument, & operated as a specific bequest of them; & the shares therein of cestuis que trust under the settlement, who pre-deceased settlor, lapsed in favour of the residuary legatee under this will.

(2) This is not a question of election. Election arises when testator disposes of his own property & at the same time affects to dispose of property which belongs to some one else. This is a mere question of construction & the effect is that the confirmation of the settlement by the will operates as a specific bequest of the bank shares mentioned in the settlement upon the trusts thereby declared (HALL, V.-C.).—*BIZZEY v. The interest of the residue he directed to be paid to B. & C., his heirs-at-law & next of kin, during their lives, etc. The principal of the residue he gave to D., etc. B. & C. reduced the death-bed disposition:—Held: they could not claim the life-interest given to them, either under the testamentary instrument or as next of kin, for default of disposition, but, the deed not being absolutely void, according to the law of Scotland, was properly admitted in evidence against them to show testator's intention, & D., etc., the residuary legatees, must be compensated out of the life interest, given to B. & C. for the disappointment occasioned by their act.

It is equally settled in the law of Scotland, as of England, that no person can accept & reject the same instrument. If a testator gives his estate to A., & gives A.'s estate to B., cts. of equity hold it to be against conscience, that A. should take the estate bequeathed to him, & at the same time refuse to effectuate the implied condition contained in the will of testator. The ct. will not permit him to take that which cannot be his, but by virtue of the disposition of the will, & at the same time to keep what by the same will is given, or intended to be given, to another person. It is contrary to the established principles of equity that he should enjoy the benefit while he rejects the condition of the gift (LORD ELDON, C.).—KER v. WAUCHOPE (1819), 1 Bli. 1; 4 E. R. 1.

1430. ———.]—A father was seised in fee of a manor & lands, etc., in R. By settlement on his second marriage, he limited estates tail to the sons of the marriage in his lands, etc., in R., without mentioning the manor, the ultimate remainder in the lands to himself & his heirs. The father having still the manor of R. & the reversion in fee of the lands, etc., & having two sons of the marriage, afterwards made a will by which he devised all his manor & lands, etc., in B. & R. to his sons for life, with remainders to their sons in tail. There were expressions in the will from which, if there had been nothing to oppose that construction, it might be reasonably conjectured or concluded that testator intended to devise immediate estates for life to his sons, not only in the manor which was his own, but in the lands, etc., in R., in which they had estates tail under the settlement, & thereby to raise a case of election. In the will he expressly ratified & confirmed the settlement, & everything therein contained:—Held: it was not a case of election.

It is difficult, in any case, to apply the doctrine of election where testator has a present interest in the estate devised, although it may not be entirely his own; & here he had manor, & the reversion in fee of the lands; & expressly confirmed the settlement in all its parts; & you cannot, as against that express declaration of intention to the contrary, take it by conjecture, call it demonstration plain, necessary implication, or what you will, but still only conjecture, that he does not mean to confirm (LORD ELDON, C.).

If I choose to devise my real estate to A. & in the same will I dispose of an estate which is not mine but his, a ct. of equity will say that he shall take no benefit from that will unless he makes good the whole of the will; & A. would not take, therefore, unless he allows the whole of the will to be effectual, i.e. suffers his own to be disposed of according to the will or makes compensation for as much as he takes of mine. That is election. But, prima facie, it is not to be supposed that a testator disposes of that which is not his own. It must be by demonstration plain, by necessary implication, meaning by that the utter improbability that he could have meant otherwise, that the case is raised. But where there is that plain demonstration, that necessary implication, then you must give up all to pass according to the will, or make compensation. But it rests upon those contending for a case of election to show that there is that manifest plain demonstration, & utter improbability (LORD ELDON, C.).—*RANCLIFFE (LORD) v. This not being sufficient to convey the English real estate, although it was clear that it was the intention of the disponent to convey it along with the rest of his property to the trustees, the eldest son & heir-at-law insisted that it was a nullity as to the English estate, & that he was entitled to take that as heir-at-law to his father, & also to take his fourth share of the Scottish property:—Held: the heir-at-law was put to his approbate or reprobate, election, & must waive all objections, & allow the trust disposition to have full effect as to the whole property, according to the intent of the disponent, or take nothing under the disposition.—*DUNDAS v. 1433. ———.]—A case of election may arise where a lady marries while an infant, & after her marriage, & after she has become of age, joins in a settlement where property of her husband is settled by him, & property of her father is settled by him, & property in which her father has a life interest, & in which she has an absolute interest in reversion, are all settled together on the trusts of the marriage, & she becomes discoverte & then claims the reversionary property independently of the settlement. In contemplation of an intended marriage between H. & Miss S., it was agreed that certain property belonging to the lady's father, & also, property of her intended husband, & a sum of 80,000 sicca rupees in which the lady's father & mother, by the settlement made on their marriage, had life interests, & which was to belong to her absolutely after their deaths, should be settled to the uses of the marriage. No ante-nuptial settlement was made. Miss S. was then under age. The marriage took place. After she attained her majority a post-nuptial settlement was executed. Her husband, herself & her father, were parties to it. The husband & the father, respectively, brought property into the settlement in which the husband & wife were to take life interests, & the sicca rupees to which she was entitled, in reversion, for her separate use, were settled to the like trusts. The settlement stated that the lady had agreed that they should be so settled, & the husband covenanted to ratify her settlement of them, but there was no absolute covenant on her part to that effect. Before the reversion fell into possession the marriage was dissolved by the decree of the Divorce Ct. When it did fall into possession the lady claimed the rupees as her absolute property, coming to her under her father & mother's marriage settlement:—Held: as she claimed the property as her own, absolutely & free from the trusts of the settlement, she must abandon all future benefits to come to her under the settlement, & must also, out of the property, make compensation to the persons disappointed by her so electing, to the extent of the benefits she had already received under the settlement.

By the well-settled doctrine which is termed in the Scottish law the doctrine of "approbate" & "reprobate," & in our cts. more commonly the doctrine of "election," where a deed or will professes to make a general disposition of property for the benefit of a person named in it, such person cannot accept a benefit under the instrument without, at the same time, conforming to all its provisions, & renouncing every right inconsistent with them (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

The decree, therefore, after declaring that she is bound to elect, ought to contain some provision indicating that the interests provided for her out of the other items of property ought to go to make good the value of what she takes away from the settlement, & that as soon as this has been done, if it should ever be done, she will then, on the principle of having made compensation, be restored to the income provided for her by the settlement (LORD CAIRNS, C.).—CODRINGTON CODRINGTON (1875), L. 1436. — — —.]—A testatrix entitled for life to property which in case of her death without issue, an event which happened, went over to her brothers & sisters, of whom J. was one, by her will, purporting to exercise a power, which she erroneously supposed herself to possess, appointed the property to a class consisting of certain named persons referred to in the will as objects of the power, of whom J. was not one, & by a codicil gave to J. certain property over which she had a free power of disposal:—Held: J. would be put to his election whether he would take under or against the will.

When a person purports under a power of appointment to give property which is the subject of the power to persons who are not objects of the power, that is to say, in fact, to exercise a power which he has not got; that if to the person who would be defeated by that gift free disposable property belonging to testator is given by the same instrument, that raises a case of election. I have always understood that when a person coming to claim under an instrument says, if it be a will, "pay me the legacy," or "hand over to me the particular property given to me by that instrument," the exors. have the right to say " you must conform to all the provisions of the instrument," & if the instrument also disposes, or purports to dispose, of property which belongs by paramount title to the person claiming under it, a case of election arises, & he cannot take under it the benefit which it gives him unless he is prepared to fulfil the gift which it purports to make of his own property. In short, the rule may be stated in this form, that no one can take under & against the same instrument, but taking under it is bound to fulfil all its provisions (KAY, J.).—*Re BROOKSBANK, BEAUCLERK v. Such an action is not based on tort, but on the equitable principle that where a person accepts a benefit under a will on condition that he shall discharge a certain liability, he takes the benefit cum onere, & a ct. of equity will not apply to the equitable remedy the limitation contained in sect. 2 of the Act as to the time within which the action must be brought.—*JAY v. 1443 ii. — — —.]—In considering a question of election raised by a will the ct. must look at the whole scope of the will, to see if the language of the testator can be fairly interpreted as disposing of an interest which he himself possesses. The question is what was the intention of the testator as gathered from the whole will, seeing the language he has used & what it fairly means. Prima facie the ct. must construe the words of disposition as applying to an estate which the testator had power to dispose of, if the words will fairly apply to it; & in order to raise a question of election it must be clearly seen that the words used point to an estate which is not the testator's own, but that of another.—*MINCHIN v. In May following, he devised all his messuages, lands, etc., & all other his real estate or which he had contracted to purchase situate in or near the parishes of B., & S. or elsewhere in England, of or to which he or any person or persons in trust for him was or were seised or entitled for any estate of freehold & inheritance or of freehold only in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy or which he had power to dispose of or appoint by his will to J., a stranger to him in blood & his heirs to certain uses and upon certain trusts. In 1813 he paid off the mtge. & took a reconveyance by which, after reciting the mtge. the premises were limited to him & his trustee to the usual uses to bar dower. In 1809 he purchased an estate in one of the parishes mentioned in his will at an auction in Nov. 1811, that estate was conveyed to him & his trustees, to the usual uses to bar dower:—Held: (1) the reconveyance of 1813 & the conveyance of 1811 revoked the will as to the mortgaged premises & purchased estate respectively & testator's heir, who was entitled to benefits under the will, was not bound to elect; (2) to put the heir to his election, testator's intention to devise or dispose of such estate or interest must clearly appear by his will.—*FLOWDEN v. 1449. — Doctrine based on intention.—A devise by a will made before 1838, i.e. before Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), ss. 24, 34, of all the real estates of which testator then was or at the time of his death should be seised, to his heir-at-law, if testator acquired real estates subsequent to the date of his will, put the heir to his election. So also would such a devise by a testator who died before 1834, i.e. before Inheritance Act, 1833 (c. 106), s. 3, from the mere intention thereby shown to give the heir property under the will; notwithstanding that he would take nothing in fact under the will, but by his better title as heir. In such a case testator, subsequently to the making of his will, contracted to buy a certain freehold estate, & then made a codicil directing the exors. & trustees of his will to complete the purchase, & hold the estate upon the trusts of the will, which were partly in favour of the heir, & then testator took a conveyance of the same estate to uses to bar dower in his own favour:—Held: the devise by the codicil was revoked, & the heir must elect.

If a testator, before 1838, devised estate A., which he had contracted to buy, to one person, & estate B., & all other estates which he might subsequently acquire, to another, & gave benefits to his heir, & afterwards took a conveyance of A. to uses to bar dower in his own favour, & acquired other estates:—Qu.: whether the devisee of B. could claim A., & all other after-acquired estates, against testator's heir, under the doctrine of election; for the whole doctrine proceeds so entirely upon the ground of intention that the heir, in such a case, might be entitled to retain the estates, because neither of the devisees could have a better right against him than the other.

Whether the mistake be one of fact or of law, there is sufficient ground for raising a case of election (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—SCHRODER v. SCHRODER (1854), Kay, 578; 2 Eq. Rep. 895; 23 L. J. Under this direction the dividends were enjoyed by the son as long as the father lived:—Held: (1) on the father's death, the son was entitled to the stock absolutely; (2) a codicil to the father's will, executed two years after the transfer, could not be read to qualify or explain the effect of the transaction; (3) the language of that codicil, with respect to the stock, was too vague & obscure to put the son to his election between the stock transferred, & the benefits given him by the will.—*CRABB v. 1455. — — —.]—In determining what are cases of election, although a testator must be taken prima facie to have intended to dispose only of what belongs to him, there is no such rule as that where a testator has a limited interest in property forming the subject of a devise or bequest, the intention to make a disposition extending beyond that interest cannot be made clear by anything short of positive declaration. The context of the will & the aptitude of the testamentary limitations to testator's interest ought to be regarded. Therefore, where testator limited estates of which he could dispose of the ultimate reversion only, together with estates of which he was seised in fee in possession, & the limitations of both corresponded to some extent with the limitations which as to the former property already existed & preceded the reversion, & the will contained a power of jointuring which was to come into operation when the tenants for life came into possession of all the devised estates, including those of which testator had only the reversion after the estates for life:—Held: testator must have intended to dispose of the whole interest & not merely the reversion, & a case of election was raised.—WINTOUR v. CLIFTON (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 641; 26 L. J. Ch. 218; 28 L. T. O. S. 194; 3 Jur. N. S. 74; 5 W. R. 129; 44 E. R. 537, L. J.J.

by a general devise made previously to 55 Geo. 3, c. 192.

(2) The circumstance of such general devise being followed by a devise of all testator's duchy lands to one for life:—Held: this did not prevent its passing the reversion.

(3) Devise of Blackacre to deft. for life, made conditional upon his confirming the disposition in the will of such of the hereditaments thereafter devised as were the property of testator's late brother S., deceased, followed by a residuary devise of "all & every the manors & hereditaments, being freehold of inheritance, of or to which testator was then, or at his death, should be seised or entitled at law or in equity for any devisable estate or interest, or which testator then had or at the time of his decease should have power to dispose by will, including lands known as duchy lands," as to Whiteacre & two other estates, to uses for securing an annuity to an annuitant for life, & as to all & singular the same manors & hereditaments, subject as to the three last-mentioned estates to the uses thereinbefore limited, to use of pltf. for life:—Held: deft. was bound to elect between Blackacre & certain duchy lands, of which Whiteacre was one, & which stood limited to S. for life, with remainder to testator for life, with remainder to deft. for life, with remainders over for life & in tail, with ultimate remainder to testator in fee, testator having no other duchy lands.

Qu.: if Whiteacre had not been mentioned, a case of election would have been prevented from arising, upon the ground that testator contemplated the possibility of acquiring other duchy lands in the interval between the date of his will & his death.

Looking to the case of Wintour v. Clifton, No. 1455, ante, which I am bound to follow, & which seems to have been decided on very sound principles—principles quite as applicable to the particular will I am now considering—I cannot consider that testator could have intended a reversion expectant on an estate tail to be the fund out of which the legacies I have mentioned were to be raised for the benefit of the legatees (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).

(4) Prima facie, the ct. presumes, in all cases, that a testator has no intention to dispose by his will of anything of which he has not power so to dispose. That presumption arises whether testator does or does not describe them a lands of which he has power to dispose by will. But that presumption is not conclusive. It may be rebutted;

& the question in all these cases is whether upon the whole of the will it is so rebutted—whether you find upon the whole of the will enough to show that testator did intend to deal with property which in fact was not his own. If you do not, there is no question of election to be argued. If you do, a case of election arises; & it is immaterial whether testator has or has not described what he attempts to dispose of as property of which he has power to dispose by will (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).

The general rule of law is that, in sitting down to construe a will, you are to assume, prima facie, that testator did not intend to dispose of anything which was not his own to dispose of, & the circumstance of his having disclaimed such an intention will not make any difference, so far as the rule of construction is concerned (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—*USTICKE v. 1457. ———.]—By a deed dated in 1848, a firm who had received advances from S., a married woman, out of her separate estate, covenanted with trustees for payment to them of all moneys then advanced & to be advanced by S., to the extent of £15,000 in the whole; such moneys being settled upon trust for such persons as S. should by deed or will appoint; & in default of appointment, for her separate use for life. By a deed, dated in 1851, S. appointed the trust funds, after the deaths of herself & her husband, to her two sons, W. & J., & her two daughters, R. & H., in equal fourths, the daughters' shares being settled upon themselves for life, with remainder to their "children." The deed contained no power of revocation. By another deed dated in 1861, S. purported to revoke that appointment & to reappoint the £15,000 together with a further sum of £20,000 thereby settled, & representing further advances to the firm after the deaths of herself & her husband, among her sons & daughters, the daughters' share being settled upon themselves for life, with remainder to their "children." This deed also contained no power of revocation. S.'s husband died in 1865, & subsequently, by two further deeds of appointment, neither of which contained any power of revocation, S. purported partially to vary the appointments made by the deed of 1863. By her will, dated in 1867, S. purported to revoke all the appointments, & gave all her real estate to her son J. in fee, subject to the payment thereout of a sum of £10,000 to her son W.; & she gave all money standing to her credit or to the credit of any trustees on her behalf in the books of the firm, & all her L. & N.W. Railway stock, & all other the residue of her personal estate of which she should be possessed at her death, or over which she had or should have any power or disposition by will, in trust for her two daughters R. & H. in equal shares, such shares being settled upon themselves for life, with remainder to their "issue." At the date of her will S. had a considerable balance standing to her credit in the books of the firm, which in 1870 was wound up, & she had also then standing in her name a sum of £10,000 L. & N.W. Railway stock representing moneys formerly advanced by her to the firm. S. died in 1874, possessed of real estate in Yorkshire, exceeding in value the share appointed to J. by the deed of 1851, & to personal estate beyond the £35,000 settled by the deeds of 1848 & 1863, but she had no L. & N.W. Railway stock beyond that above mentioned. J. died in 1873, before his mother, having by his will devised all real estate in Yorkshire to which he should be entitled at his death to his eldest son in fee; & he bequeathed all his residuary personal estate to his executors, upon trust therein mentioned. Upon S.'s death J.'s eldest son & devisee paid W. the £10,000 bequeathed to him by her will. In an action instituted for the purpose of having the rights of the different parties claiming under the deeds & under S.'s will ascertained & declared:—Held: (1) S. having by her will shown a clear intention to dispose of the property comprised in the appointments, the various persons claiming under her will were put to their election as between the benefits conferred on them by the deeds & the benefits conferred on them by the will; (2) under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 33, J.'s estate was in the same position, quoad the will of S., as if he had survived her; & consequently, as between his estate & her disappointed legatees, the latter were entitled to put his estate to election, or in other words, to require his estate to make good the benefits intended for them by the will; but no case of election arose as against his residuary legatees & the liability to make good the one-fourth of the £15,000 taken by his residuary legatees, was charged exclusively upon the Yorkshire estates in the hands of J.'s devisee.

(3) Before you attribute an intention to a testator, to dispose of that which does not belong to him, you must be satisfied from the form of the instrument that it does dispose of the property which does not belong to him & that is all. The a benevolent society to a married woman provided that the benefit was to be payable to her "legal heirs as designated by her will." She died, leaving her husband & three children. By her will she gave specific properties & legacies to her husband & each of her three children by name, the insurance to her exors. "for the purpose of paying thereout all debts due by me," & the residue to her children:—Held: the bequest of the insurance money to the exors. was inoperative; it was payable to the three children as "legal heirs designated by will"; & the children were not bound to elect between the benefits specifically given to them & the insurance money.—GRIFFIN v. HOWES (1903), 23 C. L. T. 169; 5 O. L. R. 439; 2 O. W. R. 293.—CAN.

f. ———.]—A testator upon whose life there were two policies of insurance, one assigned to his wife "for the use & behoof" of his wife & children, & the other payable to his exors. for the behoof of his wife & children, directed by his will that his whole estate, including insurance moneys, should be divided one-half to his wife & the other half to his children. By a codicil he directed that in lieu of the house & premises deeded to his wife but since disposed of his exors. should pay over to his wife the whole amount of his two life policies. The house & premises had not in fact been disposed of but were vested in the wife at the time of testator's death:—Held: the wife was entitled to the insurance moneys, & was not put to her election between the additional one-half given by the codicil & the house.—MUTCHMOR v. MUTCHMOR (1904), 24 C. L. T. 314; 3 O. L. R. 271; 3 O. W. R. 931.—CAN.

g. ———.]—Marriage articles recited that some of the lands specified therein were held in fee & for lives, & that other were leaseholds. The settlor thereby, agreed to settle the lands on himself for life; remainder to his first & other sons, etc., in strict settlement; that they should be charged with a jointure of £100 a year for his wife; & that £2,000, his wife's fortune, should on his death be divided among his children, subject to his appointment. He afterwards acquired property, & purchased other estates.

By will the settlor devised "all his real & personal estates," subject to debts & legacies, to his eldest son for life; remainder to his first & other sons, etc.; gave £100 a year to his wife in consideration of the jointure provided by the articles; bequeathed to his younger children sums exceeding in amount £2,000, with directions as to maintenance & accumulation, etc.; & appointed his eldest son residuary legatee:—Held: the children should take the settled property under the articles, & the acquired property under the will, as there was not any inconsistency to raise an election.—*KNOX v. presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is, that testator by his will intends merely to devise or bequeath that which belongs to him, & that presumption is in favour of those who contend against the legatees. On the other hand, it is only a presumption, which may be rebutted even by parol evidence; & it may be rebutted by evidence showing that, under a misapprehension of law, the testator believed that the property which did not belong to him did really belong to him.

Any disappointed legatee is entitled to say, "You shall not take the benefit given to your estate by the will unless I have made up to me an equivalent benefit to that which testatrix intended me to take." Sometimes this is called the doctrine of compensation, which is the meaning of the doctrine of election as it now stands. The disappointed legatee may say to the devisee, "You are not allowed by a ct. of equity to take away out of the testatrix's estate that which you would otherwise be entitled to, until you have made good to me the benefit she intended for me." That means that no one can take the property which is claimed under the will without making good the amount; or, in other words, as between the devisees & legatees claiming under the will, the disappointed legatees are entitled to sequester or to keep back from the other devisees or legatees the property so devised & bequeathed until compensation is made. Thence arises the doctrine of an equitable charge or right to realise out of that property the sum required to make the compensation.

If testatrix's son, who was bound to elect, had done so, he would have elected for his own benefit to take the real estate & give up the appointed share. That is a mistake, because he can always take both provisions if he thinks fit. He is not bound to take one & give up the other; he may take both, but the benefit that he takes under the will is subject to the obligation upon him to make good the consequent loss to the disappointed legatees. The obligation is only to the extent of the benefit he derives: it cannot go beyond that (JESSEL, M.R.).—PICKERSGILL v. RODGER (1876), 5 Ch. D. 163.

B., & to the survivor the townland of B., they first paying my lawful debts; or, if they do not agree to do this, then

M. to have the £100 per annum settled on him at his marriage, & R. B. to have the residue on paying my debts. I give to my daughters M. M., O., & M. G., my property in D., provided they pay out of my chattel property £500 settled out of it on my daughter I".—Held: (1) no election arose in the case of M., such as to prevent his retaining his £100 rentcharge, as well as his share of the lands of B., jointly with R. B.; (2) no case of election by the unmarried daughters arose in connection with the devise to them of "my property in D."—HENRY v. HENRY (1872), 6 I. R. Eq. 286.—IR.

1468. ———.]—A testator had a freehold in Potter Street & a freehold in South Street, & he was entitled to two-thirds of a house & eighteen freehold cottages in South Street, the other one-third belonging to his wife. By his will he devised all his freehold messuages, "cottages," etc., in the two streets to his wife for life, she keeping them in tenantable repair, & then upon trusts for sale & division:—Held: the wife was bound to elect between her one-third of the house & cottages & the other benefits given her by the will.

If a testator, having an undivided interest in a particular property, devises that property specifically to his co-owner, a case of election arises, & the devisee must elect between his own interest in the property & the interest he takes under the will. But if testator does not dispose of it specifically, but by general words, such as "all my lands & hereditaments" or the like, no case for election arises, because there is other property of testator's sufficient to satisfy the devise itself (ROMILLY, M.R.).

I am of opinion that, under the words of the will, this is a specific devise of the property, & that the whole was to be sold after the wife's death, & the only way of effecting this is to say that testator has disposed of the entirety, & that a case for election arises (ROMILLY, M.R.).—MILLER v. THURGOOD (1864), 33 Beav. 496; 33 L. J. Ch. 511; 10 L. T. 255; 10 Jur. N. S. 304; 12 W. R. 660; 55 E. R. 461.

After her death, the eldest son recovered them in ejectment, as customary heir of his father:—Held: he was not to be put to elect between his legal right, as customary heir, & the benefits given him by testatrix's will.—*BLOMART v. 1470. Settled leaseholds renewed in name of testator—Devise of "all freeholds & leaseholds"—No intention presumed.]—Where the tenant for life of leaseholds in settlement, being under no obligation to renew obtains an extension of the term, he is a trustee, for those claiming under the settlement; & the fact of the settlement containing a special provision that a particular renewal shall enure to the benefit of the trust, does not prevent the application of this general rule. Leaseholds were settled on A. for life, with remainder to his wife, for life, with remainder to such child or children as he should appoint, & in default amongst them equally. A. renewed the leases in his own name, & by his will confirmed the settlement, & gave all "his freeholds & leaseholds" to his son, & a legacy to his daughter; he died, having other leaseholds besides those settled:—Held: (1) the will was not an execution of the power; (2) the daughter was not to be put to her election.—*TANNER v. (2) Where the gift away from the husband is of all the wife's property of a certain description, it is more difficult to show a case of election even where the wife has little or no property of that description.—Re HARRIS, LEACROFT v. HARRIS, [1909] 2 Ch. 206; 78 L. J. Ch. 448; 100 L. T. 805.

(2) The construction of the devise above stated to be corroborated by the fact of testator having used apt words in disposing of his interest in the leasehold.

(3) On a question of election by a party bound to elect between two properties, it is necessary to inquire into the circumstances of the property against which the election is supposed to have been made; for if a party so situated not being called on to elect continues in the receipt of the rents & profits of both properties, such receipt cannot be construed into an election to take the one & reject the other; & in like manner, if one of the properties does not yield rent to be received, & the party liable to elect deals with it as his own by mortgaging the same, etc., particularly if this is done with the knowledge & concurrence of the party entitled to call for an election, such dealing will be unavailable to prove an actual election as against the receipt of the rents of the other property.

He gave them £200 towards rebuilding & repairing the house, etc. "on my farm T." He then devised "my farm called P." to plffs. in like manner, but without any similar gift for repairs. After his death L. conveyed all his interest in the two farms to plffs.:—Held: (1) W. must elect whether he would take under or against the will; (2) upon his electing to take against the will, that the benefits he would have taken under the will must be apportioned in compensation of the disappointed devisees, in proportion to the value to the gifts which they lost by his election.—*HOWELLS v. 1477. ——— Devise of "all & singular the estate & mines at A."—Intention presumed.]—A testatrix devised "all & singular the estate & mines of A." to trustees in trust for sale, & gave to T. £10,000, which was to be taken in full satisfaction of any sums which she might owe him at her decease, & to W. £3,000, which she declared was to be taken in satisfaction of any rentcharge out of a certain part of her real estate. Her will contained the usual devise of trust & mtge. estates. She was in possession of the entirety of the A. estate, but was the owner only of one moiety, being in possession of the other moiety by virtue of a mtge., the money due upon which was subject to trusts, under which T. & W. on her death, became entitled each to one-fifth:—Held: T. & W. were put to their election between the benefits they took under the will & their shares in the mtge. money.

The first question is whether, according to the reasonable construction of this will, the entirety of the A. property passed by the devise. It appears to me utterly impossible to suppose that when she said: "I give & devise all & singular the estate & mines of A., in Columbia, formerly the estate of S.," she meant only to give such estate & interest as she had in the property. A will must be construed reasonably even where, by so doing, parties are put to their election (JAMES, L.J.).—WILKINSON v. DENT (1871), 6 Ch. App. 339; 40 L. J. Ch. 253; 25 L. T. 142; 19 W. 1478. Testator owner of moiety of fund—Bequest of residue including funds in name of trustees—No intention presumed.]—A testator who had a special power of appointment under his marriage settlement by deed or will of a moiety of certain funds which in default of appointment vested in his daughter, & who was also entitled at his death to the other moiety, gave all the residue of his estate, including the funds which should be in the names of the trustees of the marriage settlement, & which he directed should be considered as part of his personal estate, in trust for his wife for life, & afterwards, for his daughter, her husband & children, & upon other trusts not within the special power:—Held: the daughter was not put to her election, testator only intending to dispose of the moiety to which he was himself entitled.—Re BIDWELL'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS (1862), 1 New Rep. 176; 32 L. J. Ch. 71; 8 L. T. 107; 9 Jur. N. S. 37; 11 W. R. 161.

a female cousin, & "in case of the death of the above three females" over:—Held: the gift over took effect as each fund was liberated by the deaths of the tenants for life thereof respectively.

(2) A testator having three species of property, viz., his own property, property derived from his wife, & a reversion in £10,000 consols, bequeathed his own property to his two sisters with benefit of survivorship, his wife's property to his cousin M., & he proceeded thus:—"In case of the death of the above three females, the interest to be divided amongst my cousins, naming four, for their lives," & the property, including the £10,000 trust money, "to devolve" to the children of three of those cousins, naming them, in equal proportions:—Held: M. was not, by implication or otherwise, entitled to more than the wife's property, & there was no intestacy between the death of the surviving sister & that of M., but the different portions of the property went over, from time to time, as they were liberated by the respective deaths of the tenants for life thereof respectively, & the four cousins took life interests in the trust fund, as tenants in common, & on the deaths of each their shares, then set free, went over to the children of the three cousins per capita & not per stirpes.

(3) A sum of £10,000 consols was held in trust for two sisters for life, & after their deaths two-thirds of the capital, in trust for their brother, & one-third in trust for the two sisters. The brother bequeathed "the whole of his property" to trustees, as to part upon certain trusts for his sisters, & he afterwards bequeathed "the property, including the £10,000 trust money," to other parties:—Held: the sisters must be put to their election between the interests taken by them under the will & their interest in the £10,000.

I think testator has not only disposed of the whole of his own property, & that there is no intestacy, but that he has gone beyond that & has disposed of something that was not his own property, i.e. the consols, on the death of his two sisters; & under some misapprehension, probably, that this property was entirely his own, he has disposed of it as such, & directed it to go to the four cousins & the children of three of them (ROMILLY, M.R.).—*SWAN v. By his will he gave the rents of his leasehold houses & the interest of all his funded property or estate of whatsoever kind, upon trust for his wife for life, & after her decease, upon trusts to pay divers legacies of 4 per cent. stock, the aggregate amount of which fell short by £50 only of the amount of stock of that description, so formerly transferred by him. He afterwards made some further purchases of 5 per cent. stock, taking the transfers in the joint names of himself & his wife, & died in her lifetime, leaving no funded property except the 4 per cents., & 5 per cents. before mentioned; exclusive of which, his assets were wholly insufficient to pay his legacies:—Held: (1) all the sums of stock then standing in the joint names of the husband & wife, & whether transferred before or after the date of his will, became, by survivorship, the absolute property of the wife; (2) the will did not purport to dispose of the stock in terms sufficiently distinct & explicit to put the wife to her election.—*DUMMER v. At the death of testator the sum of £800 consols was standing in the names of himself & his wife. 1486. — Bequest of money in "my banking account whether in my name alone or jointly with my wife"—Intention presumed.]—A testator, after making certain bequests, & giving his wife a legacy of £3,000, gave all the residue of his estate & effects, "including therein the money in my banking account in the Bank of England, & money in the public funds, & whether standing in my name alone, or jointly with my said wife," & all his shares & interest in any public co., & other effects, to his wife for her life, & after her decease to other persons. At the date of the will, & at the time of testator's death, there was only one sum, viz., £7,110 Consols, standing in the joint names of himself & his wife. This stock had by a previous will been bequeathed to the wife, subject to two executory gifts over, which did not take effect, one in favour of her children, if any, & the other of her husband, if he survived. The stock had been received by testator, & by him transferred into their joint names. After testator's death his wife received the income of all the residuary estate, including the £7,110 Consols, but made no attempt to deal with the stock as her own property. There was, however, no evidence to show that she knew what her rights were. She subsequently died, & her representatives claimed the stock. The question was, whether they were bound under the doctrine of election, to compensate the residuary legatees, who would be disappointed by their taking the stock, to any & what extent:—Held:

the lands of H. to A., & appointed B. residuary legatee. She had no power to dispose of the lands of H., which were settled by her husband's will on herself for life, with remainder to B. in fee:—Held: the testatrix only intended to dispose of her estate & interest, if any, & not to dispose of property which was not her own, & therefore no case of election arose.—GALVIN v. DEVEREUX, [1903] 1 I. R. 185.—IR.

(1) testator intended the stock to pass, & was not dealing only with his right of survivorship; (2) he affected to give property belonging to his wife, & consequently, the doctrine of election applied both to the wife & her representatives claiming under her; (3) her representatives could only take the stock upon the terms of compensating the disappointed residuary legatees to the extent of the legacy of £3,000, & of the amount actually received by the wife in respect of her life interest in testator's own property.—*Re CARPENTER, CARPENTER v. 1487. Testator tenant in tail—Devise of manors—No manors except those settled in tail—Intention presumed.]—By an indenture dated 1710, which was recited to be in pursuance of marriage articles, certain estates were settled upon R. & H., his wife, & the heirs of their bodies. R. died in the same year, leaving issue by H., a son G., & two daughters, L. & M. In 1735, H., by a deed poll, reciting in mistake that she was tenant for life only of the premises, with remainder to her son G., in tail, granted & surrendered the premises to G., to hold to G., his heirs & assigns. G. in the same year & in the lifetime of H., suffered a recovery of those & other lands of which he was tenant in tail, to the use of himself in fee. In 1767, H. died, leaving G. her only son, A. her only surviving daughter, & B. the only son of her other daughter. In 1778, G. who was the owner of other estates in fee, but had no manors except those included in the deed of 1710, made his will & devised all his manors & estates to his grand-nephew W., the younger, for life; remainder to his first & other sons in tail; remainder to his other grand-nephew X. pltf. in equity, for life; remainder to his first & other sons in tail; remainder over. G. died in 1779, at which time B. & A. were co-heirs in tail of H.; neither of them made any entry upon the premises, but each received a small annuity under the will of G. B. died in Jan. 1790; & in Oct. of the same year W., his son, came of age & entered upon all the premises, & remained in undisputed possession of them as tenant for life under the will of G., & treated himself as such tenant for life down to the year 1814, in which year, upon discovering his title as tenant in tail under the deed of 1710, he suffered a recovery of one moiety of the estates. N. died in 1784, leaving A., her only child, a feme covert, who died in 1797, leaving J., her only child, a feme covert, who afterwards became discovert, & married again in 1803. In 1818, J. & her husband joined W. in a recovery of her moiety, & the entire estate was mortgaged by W. to pltf. at law. W. died in 1824, & pltf. in equity, H., entered into possession of all the estates, as next tenant for life, under the will of 1778. Pltfs. brought ejectments, & recovered a verdict, subject to a special case. X. filed his bill, insisting that the ct., according to its usual course, must consider the indenture of 1710 as reformed according to the presumed intent of the marriage articles, by considering H. to have been tenant for life only, in which event the recovery by G. would have been good in equity; but this the ct. refused to do at the outset, saying, that the ct. would never interfere to correct a settlement, where the party entitled under the articles had, at law, & was in the enjoyment of, the very same estate which he asked the ct. to give him. The bill then insisted that W., who had possession of the deed of 1710

from the time of his entry, was bound to have elected whether he would take under or against the will of G.; that he had by his acts rendered it impossible to compensate the disappointed devisees, & must, therefore, be deemed to have elected to take under the will of G.; that he must, therefore, be considered to have become, by the recoveries in 1814, & 1818, a trustee of the entire legal estate for the parties claiming under the will of G.; & that pltf. was entitled to the same equities against the mtgees., they having notice of the facts which made it obligatory upon W. to elect, & his inability to compensate:—Held: the will of G. did raise a case of election, as it showed an intent to devise certain “manors” but of which manors he was only tenant in tail, but being of opinion that there was no evidence to show that the mtgees. or their agents had a knowledge of the various circumstances which, it was insisted, had bound W. to take under the will, the ct. would consider them as purchasers for valuable consideration, without notice, & would dismiss the bill as against them, with costs.—WOODRUFFE v. DANIEL (1843), 1 L. T. O. S. 335; 7 Jur. 959.

1490. Testator's charge on wife's land in respect of purchase-money—Specific devise of property—No real property except charge—No intention presumed.]—(1) Where an estate, L., had been contracted to be purchased by a woman, who married, leaving part of the purchase-money unsatisfied, which was paid by her husband, who took the conveyance to himself & devised the estate:—Held: the estate was the property of the wife, subject to a charge in favour of her husband for the amount of purchase-money contributed by him.

(2) The husband having devised all his lands, houses, tenements, seal & personal property at L. & elsewhere, died, leaving no real property at L. other than the charge aforesaid, & having given benefits by his will to his widow:—Held: he had a sufficient interest to satisfy the words of the will without attributing an intention to devise his wife's property, & the widow was not put to her election.

(3) A testator gave his residuary estate, upon trust that the whole should, on his youngest child attaining 21, be valued & specifically divided into three equal parts for his widow & two daughters respectively, & at the death of the widow her share was to be equally divided between the daughters; with a proviso that, if either of the daughters should die before such division of the property should have been made, leaving no surviving issue, then the part of the deceased should be given to her surviving sister; but if either should die & leave surviving issue, the part of her so dying should be equally divided amongst her surviving children. The income was to go to the support of the widow & children. Both daughters having died before the widow:—Held: the real & personal residuary estate of testator had devolved on the two daughters in equal moieties, subject to the widow's life interest in one-third thereof.

(4) Where the heiress of a person interested under a will brought a suit, in which it was prayed that, if necessary, the personal estate might be administered & the debts paid, the sole contest being as to the construction & effect of a devise:—Held: it was within the general rule throwing the costs on the personal residue.—*MADDISON v. 1491. Testator entitled to estate for life & contingent reversion—Devise to donee for life with remainders over—No intention presumed.]—E., having a life estate & a contingent reversionary interest in a farm C., by his will charged his farms R. & O. with the payment of debts & legacies, & devised all his real estates, subject as to R. & O. to the charge, to H. for life, with remainders over, & with a contingent executory devise to M. for life. Under a settlement made in E.'s lifetime, the farm C. was settled, subject to E.'s life estate, upon M. for life with remainder to her children, of whom H. was one, in fee, subject to be divested in the event of their dying without leaving issue:—Held: testator did not intend to devise more than his own interest in the C. farm, & M. & H. were not put to their election.—EVANS v. EVANS (1863), 2 New Rep. 408.

1493. Disposition without reference to incumbrances—Presumed to be subject to incumbrances.]—An estate called H. stood limited, along with some other property of small amount, to W. for life, with remainder to his children in tail, remainder to J. for life, remainder to trustees for a term, in trust to raise £10,000 for the younger children of J. & the younger children of O. &, subject thereto, to the first & other sons of J. successively in tail, with divers remainders over. J. died in the lifetime of W. leaving a will, by which, though not in possession of the H. estate, & having no devisable interest in it, he purported to devise it to pltf., who was his eldest son, in fee, & gave various benefits to his own younger children. W. afterwards died without issue, upon which pltf. became entitled to the H. estate as tenant in tail, subject to the £10,000 charge:—Held: the younger children of J. were not put to their election between their shares of the £10,000 & the benefits given them by their father's will, for a devise of an estate did not per se import an intention to devise it free from incumbrances, so as to put incumbrancers to their election, &, moreover, an absence of intention to devise the estate free from incumbrances was to be inferred from the fact that nothing had been given by the will to the children of C. so that they were clearly not put to their election as to their shares of the £10,000.—*STEPHENS v. 1495. — Bequest by husband of "his jewels"—Husband entitled to family jewels—No intention presumed.]—(1) Old family jewels do not constitute paraphernalia.

(2) Pearl ornaments presented to a married woman by a third party, are part of her paraphernalia. So, likewise, brilliant bracelets bought by the husband & given to the wife, though worn with the family jewels, constitute part of her paraphernalia.

A husband, who was entitled to family jewels & diamonds, bequeathed to his wife all "his" jewels for life, &, afterwards, as heirlooms:—Held: this bequest did not include pearl ornaments presented to her, or brilliant bracelets bought by the husband & given to the wife, & worn with the family jewels, so as to put the wife to her election.—*JERVOISE v. 1496. — Bequest of property "assumed by marital right"—"Which belonged to her before marriage"—Intention presumed.]—Where a lady was possessed of jewels & ornaments of the person before her marriage, & after her marriage they were in all writings spoken of by her husband as hers, & were deposited with bankers, with whom she, with his consent, kept a separate account, & after her lunacy the husband made his will, giving her the use of his plate, furniture, linen, jewels, & household effects, including the jewels & effects "which belonged to her before her marriage," & which he "had assumed by marital right" during her life; upon the death of the lunatic, who survived her husband:—Held: the next of kin of the husband were entitled to such of the articles as did not consist of paraphernalia as their property, but as to such as formed paraphernalia, the next of kin of the wife were entitled to elect whether they would take them or the benefits given by the will.—Re HEWSON, D'ALMAINE v. MOSELEY (1854), 23 L. J. Ch. 256, L. J.J.

1497. Devise of freehold & leasehold property at specified places—Described as surrendered to use of will—No property in places specified except wife's property not surrendered—No intention presumed.]—Testator devised all his estates in different places, which he had surrendered, to his wife for life, with remainders over. In some of the places he had no estates but in right of his wife:—Held: these did not pass by the will, & did not put the wife to an election.—READ v. CROP (1785), 1 Bro. C. C. 492; 28 E. 1498. Leasehold part of wife's settled estate—Renewal in name of husband—Disposition of "my freehold & leasehold estates"—No intention presumed.]—Previous to marriage, the intended wife settled freeholds & leaseholds in such a manner that the husband took nothing beyond an equitable life estate in them, except in the event of her dying in his lifetime without making any appointment. He, by another deed of the same date, gave her a life interest in his estates; afterwards, by his will, having devised to her his estates for her life, & bequeathed to her other benefits, he directed that what he had thus devised & bequeathed to her should be in satisfaction of all claims upon his estates & property that she might have under the settlement made by him previous to marriage or in any other manner:—Held: this proviso did not raise a case of election against the wife with respect to what was originally her own property, & she could take all the benefits given her by the will, & retain a leasehold, part of her own estate which her husband was bound to renew, but had renewed in his own name.—COLEMAN v. JONES (1827), 3 Russ. 312; 6 L. J. O. S. Ch. 16; 38 E. R. 593, L. C.

1499. Wife's furniture—Bequest of "furniture of every description in his home" at time of death—Intention presumed.]—(1) Testator gave to his wife for her life, the use of the furniture, etc., of every description in his house at the time of his death. There was both furniture, etc., belonging to testator, &, also, furniture settled to the separate use of the wife, in his house:—Held: the widow was bound to elect between the benefits given by the will, & her own property in the house.

(2) Testator directed his exor. to permit his wife to enjoy a copyhold estate for life, &, afterwards, to dispose of it & invest the produce for the purpose of educating the children of H.; he then gave another copyhold for the benefit of the same children, &, subsequently, gave to his exors. all the residue "for the purposes thereinbefore mentioned":—Held: the children were absolutely entitled to the residue, & the widow was not entitled to a life interest therein.—*PARROTT v. m. Property subject of marriage settlement—No intention presumed.]—By settlement made on the marriage of W. & the vendor, & dated Jan. 13, 1846, the vendor assigned to trustees certain lands in T., which were then in her possession under a church lease, dated Nov. 1, 1845, upon trust, to permit W. to receive the rents & profits for his own use during the joint lives of W. & the vendor, & after the death of either to convey the said lands to & for the sole use & benefit of the survivor. By his will dated Jan. 23, 1846, W. devised unto his wife "all the estate & my interest in the several lands & premises situate in T., held under the See of A., the last renewal of the lease of which lands was made to my wife in her maiden name Dec. 1845, & to the entire of which lands I am now beneficially entitled," & "all my interest in the lands of R., in T. A codicil to said will, dated May 11, 1853, provided that "my property in T." be divided share & share alike between testator's children, property"—Testator entitled to no interest in R. property.—Intention presumed.]—The wife of testator was entitled to a share of the produce of the R. estate, which had been directed to be sold. By his will, testator gave all "his share, estate & interest," in the R. property to his daughter, & benefits out of his own estate to his widow :—Held : the will raised a case for election as against the widow.

I am of opinion that this will raises a question of election. Testator intended to dispose of this property by will. It was not his, but belonged to his wife ; & she having taken & enjoyed the benefits provided for her under his will & acted under it, must be considered as having elected. This property must go, therefore, as if it had been testator's property (ROMILLY, M.R.).—WHITLEY v. WHITLEY (1862), 31 Beav. 173 ; 54 E. R. 1104.

1503. Wrong statement of effect of settlement.—No intention presumed.]—Under a settlement, the four daughters of a testator took equal shares, subject to his life interest. Testator, by his will, recited that under the settlement his two daughters, A. & B., would become entitled, & that in making his will he had taken the same into consideration, & had not devised to them so large a share under his will as he otherwise should have done. He then devised to A. & B. certain estates, & to his other two daughters, C. & D., other estates, of much greater value. The will did not purport to affect the settled property :—Held : as the will did not purport to make any disposition of the settled property, & was only made under a mistaken impression, C. & D. were not put to their election.—BOX v. BARRETT (1866), L. R. 3 Eq. 244 ; 15 W. R. 217.

(h) Admissibility of Evidence.

1504. Whether extrinsic evidence admissible.]—Election to take under or in opposition to a will can only be compelled upon something in the will, not dehors.

You have proved that in 1764, when the recovery was suffered, he [testator] took himself to be master of the whole. I have no doubt, but that if he had been asked, when he made his will, whether he did not mean the whole, he would have said, yes ; & if desired to put in a description of it, he would have done so ; that I believe upon the evidence you have brought. But to do this I must say, that evidence dehors the will of testator's opinion at any time may be produced ; & I do not think that is the law of the ct. (LORD THURLOW, C.).—STRATTON v. 1505. — Matters after execution of will.]—

(1) The heir was put to his election between estates devised to him & descended, the deviser having been tenant in tail of some, & tenant for life with the reversion in fee of others.

(2) The ground of election against the heir is not only an implied condition that he shall confirm the whole will, but also the intention, in case the condition shall not be complied with, to give the disappointed devisees, out of the estates, over which the deviser had power, a benefit correspondent with that of which they are deprived by such non-compliance. The construction is accordingly : to the heir absolutely, confirming the will ; if not, in trust for the disappointed devisees as to so much of the estate given to him as shall be equal in value to the estates intended for them.

(3) A will, if extrinsic evidence cannot be admitted, is not to be construed by matters posterior to its execution.

(4) It is said that, notwithstanding all the evidence furnished by the will of an intention to pass the whole estate, it is yet apparent that testator could not conceive himself to have had the whole interest in it, as about six months after the execution of the will he procured his son to join in a lease of it for sixty years, if either should so long live ; whereas, if he thought himself tenant in fee, he could have granted a lease of any duration without his son's concurrence ; but I do not see how, supposing extrinsic evidence to be at all admissible, the will can be construed by matters posterior to its execution. What he knew in 1790 cannot be determined by evidence of what he knew in 1791. Whatever may have been the motive for joining his son in the lease, I very much doubt whether it could be that he knew himself to be only tenant in tail with a reversion in fee ; for with all the anxiety, which the will manifests, to keep the estate in the family as long as possible by making his son & grandson tenants for life, it is inconceivable that he should not have acquired to himself the power of making those limitations effectual, if he knew that, as things stood, they would be wholly inoperative. However, with this supposed knowledge of his real situation, he confirms his will just as it stood. If, as it stood, it did comprehend the whole of this estate, the consequence would only be that he chose purposely to confirm a disposition, which he might at first have made through mistake. An assumption of power to give what a testator knows not to belong to him is at least as much a ground of election as a disposition of what he has mistakenly conceived to be his own. Indeed, some judges have thought, though, as I apprehend, erroneously, that it is only when a person knows the estate he devises not to be his own, that the doctrine of election takes place (GRANT, M.R.).—WELBY v. WELBY (1813), 2 Ves. & B. 187 ; 35 E. R. 290.

1515. Revocation by settlor in excess of powers—Disposition of interests not revocable—Gift to beneficiary entitled under settlement.]—A lady on her marriage appointed by deed poll £3,000 to trustees, the interest to be paid to her husband for life, & after his decease, the capital to be divided between her nephews & nieces; & the deed contained a power to revoke the trusts subsequent to the life estate. By her will, after marriage, she revoked all the trusts of the deed, & gave £1,000 to her husband & £2,000 to pltf.:—Held: (1) testatrix, having revoked all the trusts of the deed while the power only extended to the remainder, the husband was put to his election; (2) the will was made under an erroneous impression, & was intended to revoke all the trusts of the deed.

I think it is impossible to read this lady's will without seeing that she thought she had complete dominion over the £3,000. By her marriage settlement she had secured the interest of it to her husband for his life, & after his decease she had given the capital to certain volunteers, relatives. By the marriage settlement she retained to herself a power of revocation, so far as the interest of these volunteers was concerned, but no power of revoking the life interest of her husband. In this state of things she makes her will, & in the clause of revocation it is evident that she meant to revoke all the trusts, & not only the trust as regards volunteers. Then in giving the £1,000 to her husband, she does not expressly say "immediately after my decease," but it is as clearly implied as if the word "immediately" had been used, because it is obvious that this was a trust to take place as soon as she herself was dead. I think it perfectly clear that that will is made upon the assumption—the erroneous assumption—that she had the power of revoking the whole trusts, & I cannot assume that if she had been duly informed that her husband had already irrevocably secured to him a life interest in the whole fund, she would have thought of giving him £1,000 in addition to that life interest; she gives it to him because she wished him to have £1,000 in satisfaction of all claims upon this fund; & having given £1,000 to him she gives the residue of £2,000 to ptff. It is as plain a case of election as was ever brought before the ct. (MALINS, V.-C.).—COUTTS v. ACWORTH (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 519; 39 L. J. Ch. 649; 18 W. R. 482; previous proceedings (1869), L. 1516. — Will revoking all previous wills & settlements—Irrevocable settlement—No intention presumed.]—S., a solr., made three settlements. Two of them contained a power of revocation, & the third was a declaration of trust by S. of certain leaseholds belonging to him in right of his wife, & of which he had renewed the lease in his own name. S. destroyed each of the settlements containing a power of revocation, & although there was no evidence to show that the declaration of trust had been destroyed, it could not be found at the death of S. It was kept in a box with other papers at S.'s bankers; but search for it was made by the exors. of S. & others without finding it. Among the papers belonging to S. was found his private ledger, which contained entries referring to the declaration of trust. The entries stated in effect that S. had settled the leaseholds in question on his wife & himself during their joint lives, with remainder to the survivor for life, & after the death of the survivor, as the wife should appoint, among the children, & in default of appointment, among the children, & also that the wife had died without appointing, & consequently, all the children would take the property in equal shares. There were five children, two sons & three daughters. By his will S. gave legacies of £8,000 to each of his daughters, payable five years after his death, & interest in the meantime to be paid on each legacy at the rate of 3 per cent. half-yearly; & after giving & devising all his real & leasehold estates to his elder son, & bequeathing the residue of his personal estate between his two sons as therein mentioned, testator revoked, set aside, & avoided all other wills, settlements, & agreements for settlements which he had at any time theretofore made & executed. The questions were, whether the declaration of trust contained a power of revocation, & if so, whether testator had by his will exercised that power so as to revoke the declaration of trust; & if the ct. should be of opinion that the declaration of trust did not contain a power of revocation, then whether the will

did not show an intention on testator's part to revoke the declaration of trust, & thereby cause a case of election to be raised against the younger children; & also, what rate of interest was payable on the daughters' legacies.—Held: (1) the declaration of trust as to the leaseholds was not destroyed by testator, but it had been lost & did not contain a power of revocation; (2) the will showed no intention to revoke the declaration of trust, & raised no case of election; (3) the rate of interest to be paid on the daughters' legacies was 6 per cent. per annum.—Re BOOKER, BOOKER v. BOOKER (1886), 54 L. T. 239; 34 W. R. 346.

SUB-SECT. 2.—PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION.

A. Election against Instrument.

1517. General rule—No election unless fund for compensation.]—(1) Personal estate under marriage articles to be invested in land, or government, or other securities; the ct. finding in its original state, considers it as personal; but part having been laid out in land, which was settled, & afterwards sold, & the produce invested in stock, till a proper purchase of land could be found to be settled to the same uses; that was considered as land.

(2) Parties taking under a will, executing a power of appointment, dispute part of it; there being no fund but that to be appointed, it is not a case of election.

The doctrine of election cannot apply, where there is no other subject but that to be appointed. It never can be applied, but where, if an election is made contrary to the will, the interest that would pass by the will can be laid hold of to compensate for what is taken away; therefore, in all cases there must be some free disposable property given to the person, which can be made a compensation for what the testator takes away (LORD LOUGHBOROUGH, C.).—BRISTOW v. ## PART X. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

1518 I. Compensation to disappointed beneficiaries—From benefit given by instrument.]—The remedy in cases of election is compensation & not forfeiture. A beneficiary is therefore entitled to claim both under & against a will, except so far as may be necessary to compensate other disappointed beneficiaries. The presumption in favour of election is rebutted where by the terms of the will the possibility of making compensation was defeated.—PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. BROOKMAN (1914), 15 S. R. N. S. W. 6; 39 N. S. W. N. 6.—AUS.

1518 II. —.—.]—M., a resident of Queensland, died in 1878. By his will he gave his residuary estate, which consisted of real & personal estate in Queensland, to his trustees upon trust for his widow for life, & after her death upon certain trusts for his children in equal shares, & he gave his trustees a discretionary power of conversion. One of testator's children predeceased him unmarried, & the share of this child passed as on intestacy to testator's next of kin. B., a daughter of testator, became entitled by virtue of testator's partial intestacy to a one-eighteenth share of the estate in remainder expectant upon her mother's death. This daughter being under age & resident in New South Wales, intermarried with S., also a resident of New South Wales, & there was issue of the marriage one daughter, D. Prior to her marriage with S., R. had entered into marriage articles which purported to settle the interest which

B. took under her father's will, & all other property to which she was, or might become entitled, upon trust for B. for life, & after her death to pay the income to S. until his death or bankruptcy, with remainder to B.'s daughter D.

D. having claim to succeed to two-thirds of B.'s personal estate upon her intestacy.—Held: D. could not set up that claim, & at the same time claim that S.'s one-third interest under B.'s intestacy was settled by B.'s marriage settlement without compensating S. out of her interest in any property passing under the settlement.—GREGG v. PERPETUAL TRUSTEE CO. (1918), 18 S. R. N. S. W. 252; 36 N. S. W. N. 82.—AUS.

A., under the erroneous expectation of acquiring an absolute power of disposition, having levied a fine of her husband's estates, devised a portion of them worth about £135 per annum to G., her grandson in fee; another portion of like amount, together with an estate of her own at N. of the annual value of £115, for the benefit of the widow & children of W., her eldest son; & the residue, worth about £600 per annum, to her daughter E. in fee. W., being entitled, under the will of S., as one of his children, to one-sixth, & as heir to three of his brothers who died without issue, to three-sixths, of his father's estates, devised all his real estate for the benefit of his widow & children, & died shortly before his mother, A.:—Held: the widow & children of W. electing to take under the will of S. & in opposition to that of A., & by that election frustrating, to the extent of £455 per annum, the disposition of the latter in favour of E., E. was entitled to the estate at N. in partial compensation.

(2) Infants being bound to elect to take under or against a will, reference was made to the master to inquire which was for their benefit.

(3) When a party elects to abide by the will, the practical consequence is that he must relinquish his own estate, of which the will purports to dispose; & the ct. has in some instances directed him to execute a conveyance, in conformity to the intention of testator, not leaving the estate to pass by the will, which would give to the devisee only an imperfect title. . . . The ct. imposes an implied condition that if the party accepts the estate which testator had power to give, he shall convey his own, over which testator had no power, to the individual to whom it is actually, but ineffectually, devised. If he refuses to abide by that condition &, preferring his own, rejects the estate offered to him on the terms under which, if at all he must take it, renouncing the will, it is a practical consequence that he is not permitted to retain, but must relinquish, the benefits which it purports to confer on him (PLUMER, M.R.).

(4) The equity of this ct. is to sequester the devised estate quousque till satisfaction is made to the disappointed devisee. I conceive it to be the universal doctrine that the ct. possesses the power to sequester the estate till satisfaction has been made, not permitting it to devolve in the customary course; out of that sequestered estate so much is taken as is requisite to indemnify the disappointed devisee; if insufficient, it is left in his hands (PLUMER, M.R.).—*GRETTON v. The settlement also contained an agreement by the husband to vest in the trustees upon certain trusts all property to which he then was or should become entitled under any settlement or appointment executed or to be executed by his father, or under the will of his father or mother, or by virtue of the intestacy of either of them. At the time of their marriage both the husband & wife were under age, & the settlement was confirmed by the ct. on behalf of the wife but not on behalf of the husband, who attained his majority in Nov. 1883.

The father died in May, 1887, & by his will confirmed certain settlements made by him in his lifetime, under which the husband took an interest, & gave the residue of his real & personal estate to his two sons, one of whom was the husband, in equal shares. The husband received the £1,500 a year from the trustees of his settlement during his father's lifetime, &, after his death, until July, 1888, when he repudiated the settlement. On action by the trustees, claiming that the husband was bound by the settlement & could not repudiate it, & in the alternative, for compensation for the parties disappointed by such repudiation:—Held: (1) the husband must repay to the trustees the instalments of the £1,500 a year which he had received since his father's death, & the trustees were entitled to be paid the same out of the property coming to the husband under his father's will in priority to the husband's mtgees. & to his trustee under a deed of arrangement; (2) the trustees were entitled to retain the moneys still payable to the husband under the settlement to make compensation to the persons disappointed by the repudiation, & such retainer operated as a

Before trial, she married again:—Held: if she elected to avoid the covenant, her interests in other property under the settlement, & also in a house settled by a deed of even date recited in the settlement, ought to be impounded to compensate those who lost by her election; but the declaration was not to apply during the existing coverture to the income she was restrained from anticipating.—*HAMILTON v. She gave no benefit to one of her surviving sons, & as to another son only released him from liability to account for any moneys paid by her to him in connection with the Paraguayan property. She made no residuary bequest of her personal estate, which was considerable. By Paraguayan law a testator can only dispose of one-fifth of his property by will, the other four-fifths passing to his "obligatory heirs" who in this case were the surviving children & the grandchildren, children of the deceased children; but he can only give to charity all over which he has a disposing power. The Paraguayan property was subject to Paraguayan law. The Paraguayan property had been sold & the proceeds were in ct.:—Held: the children & grandchildren who took benefits from the English property under the will & codicils, & were also obligatory heirs by Paraguayan law, including the son who was released from liability to account, were put to their election & must compensate the charities out of their shares in the English property.—*Re OGILVIE, OGILVIE v. Upon the questions whether C. having elected to take under the will, was or was not put to his election, between the benefits given to him by the will & the chattels which were bequeathed by the same will, & whether he ought not to make compensation to his younger brothers:—Held: (1) he was not bound to make any compensation out of his legacy to his younger brothers, as he had no interest in the chattels apart from the mansion house which he could make over for their benefit, & no case of election arose; (2) the engrafted doctrine of compensation did not apply to the case of a person electing to take under the instrument which gave rise to the election.—*Re CHESHAM (LORD), CAVENTISH v. (b) Date of Ascertainment.

1540. Death of testator—Not date of election.—Where a beneficiary under a will, being put to his election, elects to take against the will, the amount of the compensation payable to the legatees who are disappointed by the election is to be ascertained at the date of the death of testator, & not at the time when the election is made.

The only remaining question is, on what terms must compensation be made? From what time is the estate to be given up to petitioner? The election is retrospective; reverting to the time of the will, the parties electing reject all that comes under it; consequently they have in the interval enjoyed the property of another; to retain the past rents & profits which they have received with no other title than that conferred by the will, would be to claim under it; renouncing the will, they admit that they have been in possession of an estate without title. There must be a retrospective account of rents & profits, & an account of sums expended for melioration of the estate, which must be reimbursed. The injustice of proceeding on any other basis than this becomes obvious when one reflects that it often happens, as has happened here, that after the liability to elect has been declared a period is allowed for consideration & determination on the part of the person affected by such liability, so that the actual election is frequently not made until some time after testator's death, & that according to well-settled rule an infant bound to elect is generally, though not invariably, allowed to declare election within six months after attaining majority (KEKEWICH, J.).—Re HANCOCK, HANCOCK v. PAWSON, [1905] 1 Ch. 16; 74 L. J. Ch. 69; 91 L. T. 737; 53 W. R. 89.

Testator held substantially all the issued share capital of the co., & that co. had promoted co. B. & held 90 per cent. of its issued share capital. The stock was in fact held by testator in trust for co. B., so that the gift to M. failed:—Held: the legatees of the shares of co. A. could not take the benefit of their legacies without compensating M. in respect of her legacy of the stock, & such compensation was a charge on their legacies in an amount equal to the value of the stock at the death of testator.—*Re MACARTNEY, MACFARLANE v. If the wife is a minor, & the covenant is for her benefit, it is voidable only & not void, & is binding upon all property coming to her during the coverture for her separate use, without a restraint on anticipation, until she avoids or disaffirms the covenant as to such property; for she may, after attaining 21, & during the coverture, elect whether the covenant shall be binding on her separate estate or not, such right of election being a necessary consequence of a married woman's power to dispose of, without her husband's consent, property settled to her separate use; but, inasmuch as a contract by a married woman, while under coverture, affecting her separate property binds only her then existing

o. Whether election excluded.—By an indenture of marriage settlement a sum of £500 & a policy of insurance for £900 were settled on trust for H., pltf., & def., M., as the settlors should appoint, & in default in equal shares on attaining age or, in the case of the daughter, being married. The settlors died leaving H. & M. their sole issue, without having exercised the joint power of appointment given them by the settlement, but E., the father of pltf. & M., left a will whereby he bequeathed, devised, & appointed to his trustees the trust funds comprised in the indenture of settlement, & all his residuary on trust to pay the income to pltf. for life, with restraint on anticipation, & on her death to hold the corpus for her children, as she should appoint, & in default in equal shares, & in default of children as she should otherwise appoint. Testator further directed pltf., within a time property, & not separate property which she may thereafter acquire, the wife in electing to confirm the covenant, thereby binds only that separate property to which she is entitled at the date of the confirmation, & not that to which she may subsequently become entitled during the coverture.

By an ante-nuptial settlement, dated in 1856, the lady being then a minor, after reciting that she would be entitled, on attaining 21, to a share of her deceased father's estate, & the intention to settle the same, it was agreed & declared between the parties thereto & the husband covenanted with the trustees, that the husband & wife & all other necessary parties would, as soon as the wife attained 21, convey the share to the trustees, upon trust for the wife during her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, & after her death for the husband till bkpcy. or alienation, with remainder for the issue of the marriage; & it was further agreed & declared that if the wife then was, or if at any time or times during the coverture she or her husband in her right should become seised or possessed of or entitled to any real or personal property for any estate or interest whatsoever, then & in every such case the husband & wife, & all other necessary parties should assure the same to the trustees upon the trusts thereinbefore declared. The settlement contained a power for the trustees, at the request of the wife, to lend any of the trust funds to the husband on his personal security. The wife attained 21 in 1857, & in 1858 she & her husband, in pursuance of the covenant in that behalf in the settlement, conveyed her share of her father's estate to the trustees of the settlement. In 1863, upon the death of a brother, the wife became entitled under his will to certain funds thereby bequeathed to her for her separate use. These funds, & also funds arising from her share of her father's estate, were with the assent of the wife, paid to the trustees of the settlement, & by them lent, at her request, to the husband on his personal security. In 1880, the wife became entitled under the will of her mother to a sum of £4,000, & a share of her residuary estate thereby bequeathed respectively to her for her separate use:—Held: the wife could elect to retain the £4,000 & share of residue for her separate use unbound by the covenant for the settlement of her after-acquired property.

(2) Semble: the doctrine of election or compensation does not apply in the case of a married woman entitled for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation.—SMITH v. LUCAS (1881), 18 Ch. D. 531; 45 L. T. 460; 30 W. R. 451.

1550. —.]—In the case of a married woman to whom an interest with a restraint on anticipation attached thereto is given by the same instrument as that which gives rise to a question of election, the doctrine of election does not apply, as the value of her interest in the property to be relinquished by way of compensation has, by the terms of the instrument, been made inalienable.

The property which, it is said, must be sequestered for the purpose of making compensation to the persons who have been disappointed by the failure of the appointment in their favour, is property given in such a manner that testatrix herself must be deemed to intend that the persons to whom she gives it shall not deal with it, & that it shall not be dealt with adversely to them; & to imply a condition of election would be to imply a condition of election against the express language of this will (CHITTY, J.).—*Re WHEATLEY, SMITH v. 1551. — Compensation out of income of life interest.]—By a post-nuptial settlement made in the year 1847, between petitioner, then an infant & a married woman, her husband, & trustees, it was agreed that all property to which petitioner or her husband in her right, was then, or should during the coverture become possessed of, should be assured & settled upon trust for the wife for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, & after her death upon trusts in favour of the husband & issue of the marriage. In 1883 petitioner became entitled as one of the next of kin of a testator, to a share of his undisposed residuary personal estate exceeding £9,000. This money having been paid into ct., petitioner claimed to be entitled to it as her absolute property, notwithstanding the post-nuptial settlement of 1847, by Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 5. The trustee of the settlement, however, contended that the fund should be transferred to him to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. Petitioner refused to bring this fund into settlement, & the question therefore arose whether she would have to elect between the fund in ct. & the income under the settlement notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation:—Held: (1) that in the present circumstances the doctrine of election was applicable, & the ct. would declare that the income of the inalienable life interest which petitioner had acquired under the settlement, & which accrued after the date of the presentation of petition, must be applied for the purpose of compensating the objects of the settlement, who would suffer less by petitioner's refusal to bring into settlement the before-mentioned fund in ct.; (2) by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), she was a feme sole with regard to the separate property she had taken, & not bound to submit her election to the ct., but was herself entitled to elect.—Re

By the law of Turkey testator had no power to dispose by will of the proceeds of sale of the Turkish property, which became divisible amongst his children. Pending an application for payment out of ct. of the proceeds of sale, the married daughter became a widow:—Held: testator by adding the restraint on anticipation showed an intention inconsistent with the application of the doctrine of election, & that intention was not affected by the fact that the daughter had subsequently become discover; & therefore she was not bound to compensate out of her interest in the residue those who were disappointed by the Turkish property not being dealt with as directed by the will.—HAYNES v. 1564. — Knowledge of power of disposition.—(1) Testator appoints to grandchildren under a power to appoint to children a fund to go in default of appointment equally, the appointment being had the children having legacies must elect.

The question is very short; whether the doctrine laid down in Noys v. Mordaunt, No. 1611, post, & Streetfield v. Streetfield, No. 1620, post, has established this broad principle that no man shall claim any benefit under a will, without conforming as far as he is able, & giving effect to every thing contained in it, whereby any disposition is made, showing an intention that such a thing shall take place, without reference to the circumstance, whether testator had any knowledge of the extent of his power or not. Nothing can be more dangerous, than to speculate upon what he would have done, if he had known one thing or another. It is enough for me to say, he had such intention; for the children of the marriage. Under the provisions of the policy the proceeds of the policy were, on the husband's death, payable to the widow, & the policy contained a condition against assignment or attempted assignment:—Held: there was a restraint on anticipation, the settlement was ineffective so far as the policy was concerned, & the widow was put to her election.—BOLSTER v. BOLSTER, [1916] 1 I. R. 57.—IR.

1565. ———.]—A will directed that in case testator should enter into contracts for the purchase of lands, & die before the conveyance, such contracts should be carried into execution & the money paid out of his personal estate, & the conveyance made to his trustees, their heirs, etc., to the uses of his will:—Held: the heir-at-law, having interests bequeathed to him, was put to his election.

The ct. will not speculate upon what he [testator] would have done in the different cases put. If the instrument is such as to indicate what the intention was, the only question is, did he intend the property to go in such a manner; not, whether he had power to do so, & would have done it, had he known, he could not without a condition imposed upon another person; whether he thought he had the right or knowing the extent of his authority intended by an arbitrary execution of power to exceed it, no person taking under the will shall disappoint it (LORD ERSKINE, C.).

In every case of election, there must be an intention to dispose of that, over which that person has no power of disposition. That is the circumstance that creates election. Testator, with this peculiar object, the application of his personal estate to the acquisition of great landed property, was not aware of the distinction between real & personal estate; &, therefore, conceived that, under this direction of his will as to his future contracts for purchases, his trustees would be legally seised according to the uses of his will. As he had not the power to make that disposition, the heir takes those estates that cannot pass by the will; but testator not being aware of that gives considerable interests to his heir, but gives those interests, under the conception that the whole property & arrangement were subject to his control; & upon that ground the principle of election must prevail. The heir takes these estates, as if his father had not made a will; but my opinion is that he cannot also take what is given to him by the will. He must, therefore, elect (LORD ERSKINE, C.).—THELLUSSON v. WOODFORD (1808), 13 Ves. 209; 33 E. R. 273, L. C.; affd. sub nom. RENDLESHAM v. WOODFORD (1813), 1 Dow, 249, H. L.

SUB-SECT. 1.—ERRONEOUS EXERCISE OF POWER IN APPOINTMENT.

A. In General.

1573. Fund not subject to power—Appointment partly effectual—Election.]—Under a marriage settlement, a sum of consols was held in trust for the husband for life, remainder, as to a certain portion of it, for the wife for life, remainder for such one or more of the children as the husband & wife should appoint, remainder for the children at 21; &, as to the rest of the consols, in trust, after the husband's death, for the children absolutely at 21. There were five children who attained 21. Their parents, conceiving that they had power to appoint the whole of the consols, made appointments, at different times, to two of them, which more than exhausted that portion of the consols which was apportionable. Each deed of appointment declared that the appointee should not be entitled to any further or other share in the trust fund under the settlement, until he should have put in hotchpot the thereby appointed share, unless a contrary intention should be expressed in the instrument by which any further appointment should be made:—Held: though the appointable part of the consols was not sufficient to answer fully the second appointment, yet there was to be no apportionment, & the second appointee, as well as the first, was prevented by the hotchpot clause from taking any part of his one-fifth of the unappointable consols, unless he would give up the whole of what he would get under the appointment, & the unappointable consols belonged wholly to the three other children.—WARDE v. FIRMIN (1840), 11 Sim. 235; 10 L. J. Ch. 43; 5 Jur. 288; 59 E. R. 864.

1576. Successive appointments under same power—Appointment of gross amount—Subsequent appointment of aliquot shares to all objects—No election.]—A donee of a power affecting two sums of stock of different descriptions appointed a gross amount part of one of them, & exceeding one-fourth part of it. Afterwards she executed, successively, deeds purporting to appoint aliquot parts of both funds as one subject, & without noticing the previous appointment of the gross sum, which was never severed from the mass. The appointees comprised all the parties entitled subject to the appointment & the aliquot parts so appointed amounted to four-fifths, thus exceeding with the earliest appointment the entirety of one of the funds:—Held: (1) the latest appointees were not entitled to put the earlier to their election, so that the excess might be made good out of the unappointed one-fifth of the unexhausted fund; (2) the successive appointments of the aliquot parts operated upon aliquot parts of the whole of each fund &, therefore, the loss arising from the deficiency of the one fund fell upon the last appointees.

(3) A tenant for life of a trust fund with power to appoint the reversion to a child, appointed a portion of the reversionary fund to a daughter absolutely by a deed to which the daughter, the daughter's husband & the trustees of the fund were parties; & by the same deed she assigned her life interest in the appointed portion to the daughter, absolutely. By a subsequent witnessing part, it was expressed to be agreed & declared by & between all the parties that the appointed portion should be held on trust for the daughter's separate use during her life, &, afterwards, on trusts for her husband & children:—Held: the trust for the separate use was good.—TROLLOPE v. ROUTLEDGE (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 662; 10 L. T. O. S. 224; 11 Jur. 1002; 63 E. R. 1240.

1577. ————]—T. & W., acting under a power contained in a settlement to appoint in favour of children, other than an eldest son, appointed one-seventh of a sum of £7,000 to each of two of their daughters. At the dates of those appointments there were living seven children besides an eldest son. After the death of T., & when there were living only six children, besides an eldest son, of which six the two said daughters were two, W. by two deeds poll appointed the whole fund equally to all her children other than the eldest son in sixths:—Held: (1) no question of election arose; (2) the question depended upon the true construction of the deeds of appointment, & the two daughters who had each received one-seventh could not also take one-sixth, inasmuch as it was the intention of W., as shown by the last appointments, that the whole fund should go in sixths.

(3) A person entitled to a life interest, determinable if he should dispose or attempt to dispose of it, assigned it to the trustees of his marriage settlement upon trusts under which he was to receive the income for life. By the settlement he appointed the trustees his attorneys to receive the income, & gave them power to pay the expenses of managing the trusts:—Held: this was not a disposition or attempted disposition of his life interest so as to cause it to be forfeited.—Re TANCRED'S SETTLEMENT, SOMERVILLE v. TANCRED, Re SELBY, Church v. TANCRED, [1903] 1 Ch. 715; 72 L. J. Ch. 324; 88 L. T. 164; 51 W. R. 510; 47 Sol. Jo. 319.

(2) The confirmation of a will by a codicil does not revive a legacy adeemed in the interval between the will & codicil.

In 1842 a parent, having a power to appoint two separate sums of £5,000 & £10,000 amongst his children, made his will, by which he appointed the £5,000 to J., & the £10,000 between T. & C. In 1844 he, by deed, appointed the £5,000, which he had before appointed by will to J., to T. In 1846 he, by codicil, confirmed his will, & he died in 1847. T. claimed the two sums of £5,000, but J. contended, that she was bound by election, to give effect to the bequest of £5,000 to him, or to relinquish the £5,000 given her by the will, &, that the appointment of 1844 was a satisfaction of the legacy of £5,000:—Held: no case of election had arisen, but the legacy to T. was satisfied, & the amount unappointed.—MONTAGUE v. MONTAGUE (1852), 15 Beav. 565; 51 E. R. 657.

1579. Exercise of separate powers—Appointee under first taking in default under second—No election.]—A testator had an exclusive power of appointment over an estate to his children & grandchildren, & an exclusive power to appoint a fund amongst his children only. He appointed the estate to some of his children, & the fund to his children & to a grandchild, who was not an object:—Held: this was not a case of election, & the children were not compellable to elect either to give effect to the appointment of the fund to the grandchild, or reject the benefits appointed under the first power.—Re FOWLER'S TRUST (1859), 27 Beav. 362; 54 E. 1580. ————]—A. had a testamentary power to appoint by will a fund to any one or more of his children. He had, under a distinct instrument, another testamentary power to appoint another fund amongst his children, but not exclusively to any one of them. He had five children. By his will he exercised the first power in favour of S., one of his own children, & the second in favour of two others of his children. The second power was accordingly badly exercised, & S. took in default of appointment, a share in the fund which was subject by the second power:—Held: no case by election was raised against S.—Re APLIN'S TRUST (1865), 13 W. R. 1062.

1581. General appointment by will—Special power not exercised—No election.]—Under A.'s marriage settlement property was settled on trust, after her death, for the children of the marriage as she would appoint by deed or will; &, in default of appointment it was given to the children at 21 or, in the case of daughters, marriage. Only one child of the marriage, a daughter, was living when A. made her will, & thereby "gave, devised, & bequeathed all her real & personal estate, whatsoever & wheresoever, & all other the real & personal estate of which she should at her death be seised or possessed, or over which she should at her death have a power of appointment or disposition by will," to trustees, upon trust for sale & conversion, &, "after payment of her debts & funeral & testamentary expenses," to invest the net proceeds, & apply, for the maintenance & education of her daughter, such part of the income as the trustees should think proper, & to accumulate the residue. Then a life interest in the property was given to the daughter at 21 or marriage, with remainder to her children, & further remainders over. A. had no power of appointment but that contained in the settlement:—Held: the will was not an exercise of the power of appointment contained in settlement, & the daughter was not put to elect under which instrument she would take.—*Re COTTON, WOOD v. J. died leaving his second wife surviving, & by his will which was not duly attested, directed the maintenance to be raised from the time of his death & gave other benefits to his eldest son:—Held: the trustees had no power to allow maintenance during the second wife's lifetime, but the eldest son should be put to his election as he had other benefits under the will, & was the only party that could be benefited by withholding the maintenance.—HUME v. RUNDELL (1824), 2 Sim. & St. 174; 57 E. R. 311.

1585. ————.]—(1) Testator having under her marriage settlement a power to appoint among children, appointed by her will a part of the fund to grandchildren, & gave benefits to those who would take in default of appointment:—Held: those who could defeat this undue appointment must elect between their claims under the marriage settlement, & the benefits given them by the will.

(2) A bequest by a codicil of £1,000 instead of £1,500 given by the will, is subject to the same limitations & restrictions which affected the £1,500.—PRESCOTT v. EDMUNDS (1826), 4 L. J. O. S. Ch. 111.

1586. ————.]—Testator duly appointed a fund in favour of objects of the power absolutely, & he also bequeathed to them his own property, "especially requesting them" to leave the appointed fund to persons not objects of the power:—Held: (1) this did not raise a case for election; (2) the result would have been different if there had been a direct appointment of the subject of the power to strangers.—BLACKET v. LAMB (1851), 14 Beav. 482; 21 L. J. Ch. 46; 18 L. T. O. S. 115; 16 Jur. 142; 51 E. R. 371.

B., notwithstanding this transaction, continued in possession of the property till his death. By his will he gave & devised his estate in D. to trustees, his son being one, upon trust that they should, out of the rents, issues & profits thereof, raise £300 & pay the interest to his daughter for her life, & after her decease to her children, & subject thereto, he gave the estate to his son A. for his life, with remainder to his children as he should appoint. He then devised estates he was possessed of in another county to his other son for life, with remainder to A. in fee. It appeared testator was possessed of a small property in D. worth about £6 a year, which was not subject to the power:—Held: (1) the charge in favour of the daughter & the devise of the estate in D., so far as it was given to A., was a good exercise of the power, but beyond that every gift of the estate in D. was void; (2) the sons were put to their election.—*FOX v. 1589. General rule—No election.]—Where there is an absolute appointment by will in favour of a proper object of the power, & that appointment is followed by attempts to modify the interest so appointed, in a manner which the law will not allow, the ct. reads the will as if all the passages in which such attempts are made were swept out of it, for all intents & purposes, i.e., not only so far as they attempt to regulate the quantum of interest to be enjoyed by the appointee in the settled property, but also so far as they might otherwise have been relied upon as raising a case of election.—*WOOLRIDGE v. 1590. Life estate to object—Invalid gift over—Whether case for election.]—A marriage settlement gave a power to appoint amongst her children £10,000 to a testatrix, who, by will, after her decease, be settled upon trust for those children for their respective lives; & after their decease, for their issue in such shares & proportions as they should by deed or will appoint; & if no issue, for such person or persons as they should by deed or will appoint.

There were nine children of the marriage, five sons & four daughters. The husband died, having by his will given all his property to his wife for life, & after her decease to his children equally. The wife, in exercise of her power of appointment, appointed by deed of the settlement funds among her four daughters upon condition that they should, on request in writing by her, her exors. or administrators, release to their brothers the shares taken by them, the daughters, under the father's will, & in default she appointed the funds to her sons. After the mother's death her exors. requested the daughters to make this release; three of them did so; the fourth, whose interest under the will & settlement had been settled on her marriage, did not do so, but upon the trustees of the settlement having paid the money into ct., she & her trustees instituted a suit to have the condition in the appointment declared void:—Held: the condition was valid, the limitation over being in favour of objects of the power; & the institution of this suit was not a refusal to release, but the ct. would now on inquiry elect for the married daughter & the persons interested under her settlement which would be most advantageous for them to take.—STROUD v. 1601. — In case of failure of trusts—Whether case for election.]—A testatrix had, under the will of a brother who had predeceased her, a power to appoint his property by will among his nephews & nieces & the children or child of deceased nephews & nieces. She, by her will, gave all the real & personal estate of which she might be seised or possessed at the time of her death, or over which she might have any testamentary power of disposition to trustees, upon trust for sale & conversion, & to stand possessed of the proceeds, which she described as "my said trust funds," upon trust to pay costs & expenses, & to pay her debts & funeral expenses & certain pecuniary legacies, & then upon trust as to the two one-fourth parts of her trust funds respectively for persons who were objects of the power; & upon trust as to the other two one-fourth parts respectively for persons who were not objects of the power; & she declared that, in case of the failure of the trusts thereinbefore declared of any of the one-fourth parts of her trust funds, the one-fourth part, or so much thereof of which the trusts should fail, should be held upon the trusts thereinbefore declared of the others or other of the fourth parts of which the trusts should not fail:—Held: (1) testatrix had manifested an intention to exercise the power & as to one moiety of the brother's property the power was well exercised; (2) as to the other moiety of the brother's property, the appointment was invalid but, by virtue of the gift "in case of the failure of any of the trusts thereinbefore declared," that moiety went to the persons to whom the first moiety was well appointed & consequently, no case of election arose.—*Re SWINBURNE, SWINBURNE v. #### D. Appointment Void for Illegality.

1602. Appointment void for remoteness—Whether case for election.]—*WOLLASTON v. KING, No. 1418, ante.

1603. — .]—(1) There is no inflexible rule that if the word "issue" is evidently used in one clause of a settlement as meaning "children" only, it must be construed in the same sense in every other clause. A marriage settlement contained a power for the wife to appoint by will among the issue of the marriage, & in default of appointment, the trust fund was to be in trust for the issue of the marriage, if more than one in equal shares, the son or sons at 21, & the daughter or daughters at 21 or marriage; & in case there should be but one child, issue of the marriage, or, if more than one, all but one should die without

PART X. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.—D.

1602 i. Appointment void for remoteness—Whether case for election.]—By a marriage settlement trust funds were settled upon trust for H., the intended husband, for life, & after his death for the issue of the marriage, as he should by deed or will appoint; & in default of appointment, equally, H., by his will, bequeathed & appointed all the property subject to the trusts of the settlement, together with other property not comprised therein, to trustees, upon trust, after his death, to pay the income of the property subject to the trusts of the settlement, to his six children & their survivor for their lives & life; & after the decease of the survivor of his six children he directed that the trustees for the time being of his will should stand possessed of all the said trust premises, as well those comprised in the settlement as those not so comprised, upon trust to divide the same among all such of his grandchildren, as being males, should attain the age of 21 years, or being females, should attain that age or marry, such grandchildren to take per stirpes & not per capita, & the children of each stock or family to take as between themselves, in equal shares, as tenants in common:—Held: the gifts in the will to the grandchildren being void as transgressing the rule against perpetuities, no case of election arose.—Re HANDCOCK'S TRUSTS (1889), 23 L. R. Ir. 34, 42.—IR.

1602 ii. — .]—By a marriage settlement certain trust funds were settled upon trust for the husband & wife successively for life, & after their deaths for such of the issue of the marriage, whether children or remoter issue, at such time & in such shares as the husband & wife should jointly appoint, & in default for all the children of the marriage who should attain 21, or marry, in equal shares. The husband, who survived his wife, by his will, reciting his power of appointment under the settlement, & that no appointment had been made thereunder, bequeathed both the property subject to the trusts of the settlement & other property of his own to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his daughter for her life without power of anticipation, & after her death he directed his trustees to hold both capital & income in trust for the children of his daughter as she should appoint, & in default of appointment for all her children equally, & he directed that his daughter should, within such time after his decease as his trustees & exors. might think proper to appoint, elect in writing whether she would rely on her rights under the marriage settlement or take the benefits provided for her by his will, & in the event of her not electing to take the benefits provided for her by his will, he directed his trustees to hold the property upon certain trusts for the benefit of his son for life, & after his decease for his children. The daughter elected to take under the will:—Held: inasmuch as, reading the provisions of the will into the settlement, the restraint on anticipation of the income of the settled fund appointed to testator's daughter, & the trusts in favour of her children, infringed the rule against perpetuities, she was not bound to elect, & was not bound by the election made by her.—Re MCCORMICK, HAZLEWOOD v. FOOT, [1915] 1 I. R. 315; 49 I. L. T. 174.—IR.

having become entitled, then, in trust for such only or surviving child; &, in case there should not be any issue of the marriage, or all such issue should die without having become entitled, then upon other trusts:—Held: the word "issue" in the power of appointment must be construed in the strict technical sense, & an appointment by the wife to the children of a deceased son was valid.

(2) The wife appointed another part of the fund on trust for another living son for his life, with remainder to his child or children who should attain 21, if more than one in equal shares. Testatrix also bequeathed property of her own to the persons who were entitled in default of appointment. It was admitted that the appointment to the children of the living son was void for remoteness:—Held: the appointment being ex facie void, the will must be read as if the appointment had not been contained in it, & the persons entitled in default of appointment were not bound to elect between the interest which they took in that way, & the benefits given to them by testatrix out of her own property.—Re WARREN'S TRUSTS (1884), 26 Ch. 1604. ———.]—In applying the doctrine of election as to taking under or against an instrument, there is no distinction in principle between an appointment which is void because it is in excess of the power & an appointment which is void as transgressing the rule against perpetuity. A covenant to exercise a special testamentary power in a particular way is void. W. by his will gave property upon trust for the children of A. as A. should by will appoint, & in default of appointment for the children equally. A. covenanted with the trustees of his marriage settlement to exercise the power in a particular way. A. by his will made an appointment to his son for life with an appointment over which was void as transgressing the rule against perpetuity, & he also made a bequest of property of his own in favour of the son. The covenant was not satisfied by the terms of the will:—Held: (1) the son of A. was bound to elect between the interest bequeathed to him in the property of A. & his interest in default of appointment under the will of W.; (2) the covenant was void, & therefore, could not be enforced against the estate of A.—*Re BRADSHAW, BRADSHAW v. 1605. ———.]—(1) A limitation in a deed of a trust of real estate for a class of children without any words of inheritance may confer the equitable fee upon them where the intention to do so is expressed or sufficiently shown on the face of the instrument. By a marriage settlement dated in 1831 real estate was conveyed to a trustee upon trust for the husband & wife successively for life, & after their deaths upon trust to convey & transfer the trust estate between or among the children of the marriage as the husband & wife should jointly appoint, & in default as the survivor should appoint, & in default to all the children of the marriage who attained 21, or married, in equal shares. The settlement contained a provision that no child taking under any appointment should receive anything more until all the other children had received shares equal in value to the appointed share, a power of advancement up to one-half of the value of each child's share, & a gift over if no child attained a vested interest:

—Held: there was on the face of the instrument amply sufficient indication of an intention that the children should take equitable interests in fee simple.

(2) The husband, having survived his wife, by will in exercise of the power given him by this settlement, appointed shares of the property to his three daughters for life, with remainder to their respective children, & gave his daughters interests in property of his own:—Held: the appointments being void for perpetuity, no case of election was raised by the will.—*Re OLIVER'S SETTLEMENT, EVERED v. 1607. ———.]—Under two settlements, one made in 1871 & another made in 1882, W. had testamentary powers of appointment over the settled funds amongst her issue, her children taking in default of appointment. She had also unsettled property of her own. All the children were born after 1871 & before 1882. By her will W. gave both the settled & the unsettled properties to trustees upon trust in favour of her son & her three daughters, part of the son's share being payable to him at the age of 25 years, & the share of each daughter being given in trust for her for life with remainder to her children:—Held: as the gifts to the son at 25 & to the grandchildren were in respect of the property settled in 1871 void as infringing the rule against perpetuities the children of W. were not bound to elect between what was invalidly appointed to them & the interests validly given to them by the will.—*Re WRIGHT, WHITWORTH v. He declared that the British instrument was to be construed & administered according to the law of Scotland, & the Australian instrument according to the law of New South Wales. There were separate trustees of each instrument, the two together constituting one will completely disposing of testator's estate. Under the Scottish law, there being no children, the widow's legal right, as terce & jus relictæ, was to one-half of testator's personal estate; but the provisions of the will were expressly stated not to be in full of such right. The widow claimed & established her legal right to the property in Scotland in the Ct. of Session, & also claimed the bequests made in the Australian will:—Held: as the two instruments really constituted one will, the widow must be considered to have made her election, & her interest under the Australian will must be applied to compensate the persons disappointed by her election.—*DOUGLAS-MENZIES v. property.—Tenant in tail in remainder entitled on death of settlor—Subsequent appointment of settled property under powers of settlement.]—By a settlement made in 1842 on the marriage of a female infant, the husband & wife covenanted that as soon as the wife attained twenty-one certain real estate to which she was entitled as tenant in tail, & certain personal property belonging to her, should be conveyed, & assigned to trustees upon trust after the death of the wife, for the children of the marriage as the husband & wife by deed, or the survivor of them by deed with or without power of revocation & new appointment, or by will, should appoint, & in default of appointment in trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares, & by the same settlement the husband assigned a policy of assurance upon his own life to the trustees upon the same trusts. The joint power of appointment was never exercised, & the wife died in 1857, without having executed any disentailing assurance of the real estate. Her eldest son entered into possession of the real estate as tenant in tail. In 1864 the husband, by deed reciting that the eldest son was the heir in tail of his mother, appointed all the trust funds comprised in the settlement, other than the real estate, to the four younger children, & reserved to himself a power of revocation & new appointment by deed or will. The trustees then divided the trust funds with the exception of the moneys secured by the policy, between the four younger children. In 1869 the husband by will in express exercise of the power contained in the marriage settlement, appointed specific sums of money to the eldest son & three of the younger children, & appointed the residue of the settlement funds to the eldest son. In 1878, by deed, reciting the deed of 1864, the division amongst the four younger children, & that the moneys secured by the policy were the only fund remaining subject to the trusts of the settlement, the husband, in exercise of the power reserved by the deed of 1864, revoked the appointment thereby made, & appointed the policy moneys in equal fifths, between his eldest son, his three surviving younger children, & the three children of a deceased younger child, & again reserved to himself a power of revocation. In 1883 the husband by deed made the appointment of 1878 in favour of his eldest son, irrevocable, & in 1888 the husband died. Upon a summons as to who were the persons entitled under the settlement:—Held: (1) the date of the husband's will being before that of the deed of 1878 there was sufficient evidence of "a contrary intention" within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24, & consequently that the will did not speak from the death of testator so as to revoke the appointment by that deed; (2) as the deed of 1878, although removing four-fifths of the fund from the operation of the will, did not purport to revoke it, the will under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 19, remained in force, & operated as to the one-fifth ineffectually, appointed by the deed of 1878 to the grandchildren of testator; (3) having regard to the intention shown by the appointor in the deed of 1878, the eldest son was not bound to elect between the real estate, which devolved on him as tenant in tail, & the interest appointed to him by that deed; (4) he was bound to elect between such real estate & the benefits derived by him under the will, inasmuch as the will took effect by the operation of law & independently of the intention of testator. —*Re WELLS' TRUSTS, HARDISTY v. 1624. Claim of heir-at-law on next of kin—Whether put to election.]—A., a married woman, having a general power of appointment notwithstanding coverture over fund (a), & also by her marriage settlement power to appoint funds (b) & (c) in case she died in her husband's lifetime, by her will, made in her husband's lifetime, appointed all these funds amongst several persons, some of whom were her next of kin. By the death of her husband in her lifetime A. became absolutely entitled to (b) & (c), but her will was not republished. Probate being limited to fund (a), which was insufficient to pay the legacies in full:—Held: those of the legatees who were also next of kin were not put to their election, but were entitled both to their shares of the residue, as to which, in the events that had happened, the appointment had failed, & also to proportionate parts of their legacies.—BLAIRLOCK v. GRINDLE (1868), L. R. 7 Eq. 215; 38 L. J. Ch. 247; 17 W. R. 114.

She also affected to devise freeholds, to which she was entitled in fee simple, but not for her separate use to persons other than her heir-at-law:—Held: the heir-at-law was not put to his election.—*Re DE BURGH LAWSON, DE BURGH LAWSON v. 1626. — — —.]—In 1881 a woman seised in fee simple of two freehold houses & possessed of a long-leasehold shop, but not in either case to her separate use, married a solr. On May 10, 1883, she purchased the freehold reversion of the shop. She died in 1897 without ever having had any issue, having by her will, made in 1888, devised "all" her "freehold shop" to her trustees upon trust for sale & to pay a sum of £1,300 out of the proceeds to certain named persons, & "all the residue of the real estate over which" she "had a disposing power" to her husband for life, to whom she also bequeathed all other her personal estate absolutely, & from & after his death she devised "all other" her "real estate" to her trustees upon trust for sale & to pay & divide the net proceeds as therein mentioned. The husband, the sole surviving exor. & trustee, proved the will & elected to pay & paid estate duty on the real estate passing on his wife's death. He went into, & remained in, possession of all her real estate until his death in 1917, without giving any acknowledgment of the title of the heir-at-law. He appointed plffs. exors. of his will which contained a devise & bequest of his real & residuary personal estate. Upon a summons for the determination of the parties entitled to the properties in question:—Held: (1) as to the two freehold houses: the doctrine of election did not operate, inasmuch as the husband had no title to the houses when his wife died, & even assuming, contrary to what in his lordship's opinion was the true effect & construction of the will, that the will purported to give the husband & remaindermen an interest or benefit in the houses in question, they were not estopped from saying that the houses did not pass under the wife's will; (2) as to the shop the husband's marital interest in the term prevented merger, but as the wife had purported to deal with the whole interest in the shop, & not merely the reversion, & as the husband took a life interest in it subject to the charge of £1,300, & had accepted his wife's personal estate, he must be treated as having elected to allow his interest in the shop to pass under his wife's will.—*Re COOLE, COOLE v. If a person disposes of the property of A. by his will A. cannot take the benefits given to him under the will without giving up the property which testator has disposed of; but if it happens that the legatee or devisee of other property disposed of by the will leaves that property to A. or dies intestate, & A. as his heir-at-law or next of kin, acquires some of the property disposed of by the will of the testator, then no case of election arises at all, because A. takes it independently & by a separate & distinct course. 1645. Covenant to settle real estate on children—Testamentary gift of real & personal estate—Children entitled to real estate under covenant.]—A., by deed, on his marriage, covenanted to settle by his will, all his real & personal property to his wife for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage as tenants in common.

By the same deed, an estate of the intended wife was conveyed to the use of A. for 99 years, if he should so long live; remainder to the wife for life; remainder to the children of the marriage, as the husband & wife should appoint; in default, over.

Another estate was conveyed, in contemplation of the marriage, to the use of A. for life; remainder to the intended wife for life; remainder to the children of the marriage, as A. & wife, or the survivor, should appoint; in default, over.

The marriage took effect, & there were issue three children, daughters, B., C., & D.

After the marriage another estate was conveyed to the use of A. for life; remainder to his wife for life; remainder to the children of the marriage, as A. & his wife, or the survivor, should appoint; in default, over.

A. & his wife, by deed, appointed one of the estates to the use of B. for 99 years, if she should so long live; with remainder to the use of her children, as she should appoint; & reserved a power of revocation; & he made similar appointments of the other two estates to C. & D. respectively.

B. married & died in the lifetime of A., leaving her husband & three children. C. died in the lifetime of A., intestate & unmarried. D. remained unmarried.

A. being possessed of considerable real estates, besides those appointed to B., C., & D., & also much personalty, by his will gave all his real estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life; after her death, as to one moiety, in trust, subject to the provision thereout in favour of D., for the three children of B., their heirs & assigns; & as to the other moiety, in trust for D. & her husband, if any, jointly for life, & then for the survivor for life; after his or her death in trust for the children of D., as she & her husband should appoint. The will then gave out of the first moiety to D., in case of her marriage, an annual sum equal to that which testator had settled upon the marriage of B.:—Held: by the construction of the covenant, all the children took as tenants in common, & had vested interests from the time of their birth; (2) the parties were bound to elect between the provisions made by the settlement & the will; (3) the three appointments were bad, except in so far as they gave the estates for 99 years.—NAYLER v. After the marriage the parties to the settlement, having discovered the mistake as to the stock, made an indorsement on the settlement, by which, after reciting that they had so discovered, they declared that thenceforth the stock should be held by the original trustees thereof, in whose name it was still standing, upon the trusts to which it was subject before & at the date of the settlement:—Held: (1) the children of the marriage could not claim the benefit of the

1649. Disposition by unattested will—Disposition by heir-at-law to carry out intention of testator—Administration of unattested will.]—(1) A grandfather, having made a will of his real & personal estate in 1808, cancelled it in 1810, but wrote on the back of the will a letter addressed to his only daughter, stating that she was his heiress at law, & charging her to fulfil his wishes at her death, by a disposition of a specified freehold estate to her eldest son, & by an equal disposition of his property "equally among his grandchildren, her eldest & youngest son & daughter, her three only children. The letter was unattested, & thought to be inoperative as to the grandfather's personal as well as real property. The daughter became his administratrix, & entered into possession of his real estate, & she & her husband received his personal estate in right of the daughter, as sole next of kin. By a settlement, in 1811, between the husband of the daughter, & the daughter & two trustees, & the three children of the daughter, reciting the will, its cancellation, & the letter, & that testator had died wholly intestate, but that the daughter was desirous of fulfilling the intention of the grandfather, his real estates were settled in accordance with the directions contained in the letter. The daughter died in 1827, & her husband became her administrator, & also administrator de bonis non of the grandfather. The husband of the daughter died in 1840, having previously, by will, after reciting his wish to carry into effect the desires of the grandfather, disposed of the grandfather's & his own real & personal property, between the two grandsons & the granddaughter, his children, accordingly. The granddaughter, who had married in 1843, obtained letters of administration to the grandfather with his letter to his daughter, which was then admitted as a will, annexed, & instituted a suit against the personal representative of her father, claiming that the personal estate of the grandfather should be accounted for to her ; but the benefits she received under the settlement of 1811 & will of 1837 were greater than those she claimed under the testamentary paper, the letter of the grandfather ; & it was contended that she must elect between these benefits :—Held : the deed of 1811 & will of 1837 were expressed to be founded on the intention of the grandfather in reference to his real estate only, & even after an acquiescence since 1811 in the family arrangement, no case of election arose.

(2) Under the same circumstances, the granddaughter had received an allowance of £300 a year from the time of her marriage in 1829 till the death of her father ; & her husband was also greatly indebted for advances made to him on several occasions, & became bkpt., & obtained his certificate, & a disclaimer by the assignees of all interest under the grandfather's will in his favour :—Held : the allowance must go towards satisfaction of interest on the granddaughter's one-third of the grandfather's personal estate ; & the debt due from the husband of the granddaughter must be set off against the third of his wife, the granddaughter, to be recovered by him in right of his wife against the estate of her father.—LEE v. EGREMONT, EGREMONT v. LEE (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 348 ; 19 L. T. O. S. 345 ; 16 Jur. 352 ; 64 E. R. 1148.

1650. Release of debt due to third party—Benefit to third party.]—A testatrix advanced to debt. £900 on the security of an assignment by him of a covenant by F. to transfer a sum of £1,000 stock, & to pay interest in the meantime. By her will she gave F. £3,000, & all sums due to her from him, & directed her exors. not to require payment of the £900 due from debt., but out of the £3,000 given to F. to retain enough to purchase £1,000 stock for the benefit of her estate, & if the stock were worth more than the £900 & interest, the surplus to be paid to debt. F. having pre-deceased her, she, by a codicil, directed that the £3,000 should form part of her residuary personal estate, but directed her exors. not to call on F.'s representatives for transfer of the £1,000 stock, nor to enforce payment of the £900 from debt. :—Held : debt. was not at liberty to enforce performance of the covenant to transfer the £1,000 stock against F.'s estate, except as to the difference between the £900 & the value of the stock.—SYNGE v. SYNGE, 9 Ch. App. 128 ; 29 L. T. 855 ; 22 W. C. & L. J.

1651. Original assurance incomplete—Gift inter vivos—Disposition of property by will—Not in accordance with gift.]—Testator, who was a partner with his sons & others in the R. Colliery Co., wrote to his daughter : "I have another present to make shortly, one share of R. Colliery . . . you may now consider that you have this to yourself from Jan. 2 to receive dividends upon." The partnership deed contained various stipulations as to the admission of a new partner. Testator attended a meeting of the co. where his proposal of transferring the share to his daughter was agreed to, but no formal transfer ever was made. During testator's life the dividends were paid to his firm, consisting of himself & his sons, & a cheque for the amount in the name of testator's firm sent to pltf. Testator died having by his will, dated subsequently to the letter, settled a share in the colliery on pltf. After testator's death dividends on one share were sent to pltf. :—Held : (1) testator had neither completed his intention of transferring his share nor constituted himself a trustee of it for pltf. ; (2) no case for election arose.—HEARTLEY v. NICHOLSON (1875), L. R. 19 Eq. 233 ; 44 L. J. Ch. 277 ; 31 L. T. 822 ; 23 W. R. 374.

1652. Failure of gift in codicil—Legatee attesting witness—Property passing to legatee under residuary bequest.]—Testator made a will dated before Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), by which he directed his residuary real estate to be sold & the proceeds to be divided, in the events which happened, among twelve persons, of whom A. & B. were two. He made a first codicil dated after Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), by which he directed certain real estate acquired subsequently to the date of the will to be sold, & the proceeds divided in the same way as the proceeds of his other real estate. This codicil was attested by A. & B. He then made another codicil, described as a codicil to his will of a certain date, but not referring to the prior codicil :—Held : (1) the second codicil did not operate as a republication of the first codicil ; (2) the gifts to A. & B. of two twelfth shares of the proceeds of the property comprised in the first codicil failed ; (3) these shares fell into the residue, & were divisible between A. & B. & the other ten residuary legatees.

It is not in fact a case of election at all, they take simply what is given to them by the instrument. The dispositions of that instrument are not effectual to the extent to which a share of the property is given to the attesting witness, not by reason of the terms of the will or codicil, but by reason of the law which annuls the gift. You have, therefore, to look, not at the meaning of the codicil, but to the effect of the codicil with the addition of the statutory enactment which annuls a portion of its effect, & you have to read it in exactly the same way as if these persons had been excepted from the portion of the will incorporated by reference, consequently they can by no possibility be held to take anything under such words of reference. Therefore I hold that their shares are simply void gifts & fall into the residue, & are divisible among them as well as the other residuary legatees (JESSEL, M.R.).—BURTON v. NEWBURY (1875), 1 Ch. D. 234; 45 L. J. Ch. 202; 34 L. T. 15; 24 W. R. 388.

1853. Policy moneys settled subject to power of appointment—Donee unaware of power—Power exercised by will—After benefit taken under settlement.—A married woman being, although unaware of it, the donee of a general power of appointment by deed or will over policy moneys payable upon her own death, concurred with her husband in settling certain family estates by an indenture which treated the policy moneys as the husband's own property, & settled them also. Her concurrence in the settlement was for a purpose entirely unconnected with the policy moneys, & under it she took a life interest in remainder after her husband's death in the estates, but no interest in the policy moneys. She survived her husband, received in respect of her life interest in the estates sums exceeding the amount of the policy moneys, & died, having by her will given all property over which she had any disposing power to certain beneficiaries:—Held: (1) by her will she had exercised her general power so as to make the policy moneys her own assets; (2) having taken under the settlement, benefits exceeding the value of the policy moneys, she could not by the exercise of her power take the policy moneys out of the settlement, without making good to the settlement beneficiaries an equal amount from her own estate; & accordingly the policy moneys must be paid to the settlement trustees.

Semble: the concurrence of the donee of the power in the deed of settlement, for purposes unconnected with the policy moneys subject to the power, & in ignorance of the existence of the power, could not operate as an exercise of the power although the deed purported to pass the policy moneys.—GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN v. SCOTT (1884), 26 Ch. D. 358; 53 L. J. Ch. 571; 50 L. T. 386; 32 W. R. 580.

1854. Foreign property not subject to trust—Forfeiture under will.—Testator by his trust disposition & settlement left the residue of his property in trust to be divided amongst his seven children, & directed that this provision was to be accepted in full of legitim, & that if any of the children should repudiate the settlement & claim their legal rights they were to forfeit all title to any share of his estate which he could dispose of by law. By a codicil testator directed his trustees, instead of paying over to his daughter Mrs. G. her share of the residue, to hold it for her in liferent, & after her death to divide it among her children. Part of testator's residuary estate consisted of land in the Argentine. By the law of that country no trusts were recognised in respect of land & accordingly on the death of testator his children, including Mrs. G., succeeded automatically to the land in equal shares ab intestato. Mrs. G. claimed legitim & forfeited her interest under the will, but it was held in Scotland that her children could claim as independent legatees. Mrs. G.'s children claimed that the other six children of testator should surrender to the trusts of the will the shares of land which passed to them under the Argentine law, as a condition of taking their share of the residue of the property of the testator in Scotland:—Held: as it was impossible for testator's six children by any act of their own to render the land in the Argentine subject to the trusts of the will, they were not put to their election between their shares of the land in the Argentine & the benefits conferred upon them by the will.—BROWN v. GREGGON, [1920] A. C. 860; 89 L. J. P. C. 195; 123 L. T. 465, H. L.

1. Widow—Accepting devise in lieu of dower.—Where a will expressly declares that what is given to the widow is intended to be in lieu of dower, & the widow accepts it, she is as much bound by her election in a ot. of law as in equity. A widow cannot so far elect to take under a devise as to enter into possession of the whole property out of which she claims dower, & yet sue for her dower, when that was part of the property expressly devised to her in lieu of dower.—WALTON v. HILL (1852), 8 U. C. R. 562.—CAN.

a. — Accepting benefit of mutual will.—Husband & wife, married in community, directed by mutual will that three-fourths of the joint estate should be invested & the interest thereon paid to the survivor, & that on the death of the survivor the respective heirs of the testators should take their respective shares. After the death of the husband, the wife received one-fourth of the joint estate unencumbered & received interest on the remaining three-fourths. She now claimed that she was entitled to another unencumbered fourth share by virtue of the community, & was also entitled to the benefits conferred upon her by the will:—Held: having elected to enjoy interest on more than she satisfaction of all right, claim, etc., which she, or they, or any or either of them, could set up, etc., or which she & they would be entitled to under his marriage articles; & if his wife & children or either of them should refuse, etc., he revoked the legacy & bequest therein contained to the use & benefit of such one or more of them his wife & children, who should refuse or decline to execute such release or discharge; & declared the said void as to such one or more of them, who should so refuse, as though he had died intestate:—Held: a child, electing to take under the articles, forfeited the life-interest, which fell into the residue; but the children of such child were not bound by the election.—WARD v. She survived her husband, & she declined to settle some property to which she had become entitled after his death.—Held: although she was not bound by the settlement, yet, if she elected to take against it, her life interest in the funds which had been put in settlement ought to be held by the trustees for the benefit of the children, & the widow must account for what she had received in respect of it.

This was a voluntary deed & as in the case of a will, all parties taking under it are bound to give effect to it (ROMILLY, M.R.).—ANDERSON v. ABBOTT (1857), 23 Beav. 457; 29 L. T. O. S. 223; 3 Jur. N. S. 833; 5 W. R. 381; 53 E. R. 180.

R., who was the eldest son of S., having refused to take the estate in Y., being of less value than the estate at C.:—Held: the power of revocation was not well executed by B. & S. was entitled to the estate at C., but he was a trustee of the estate in Y. not for pltf., the devisee of the C. estate, who was a volunteer, but for the heir-at-law of B.—BURGOYNE v. 1664. Conditions annexed to gift—Person electing bound by conditions.—Testator, by his will, gave an annuity of £1,200 to his wife, & after her decease he directed that the sum of £1,200 per annum so to be paid should go to & be equally divided amongst all & every his children who should be then living, share & share alike; & testator declared that the annuity so given afore-said to his wife was by him meant & intended to be & should by his wife be accepted & taken in full & entire lieu, bar, recompense, discharge, & satisfaction of & from all & all manner of claims & demands whatsoever which she at any time might or could have or which, without provision & declaration, she could or might have at the time of his decease, of, in, to, or out of any part or parts of any real or personal estate under or by virtue of any settlement or other writing by him at any time made upon or in favour of his wife, or as for or on account of any dower or thirds which she, his wife, might, could, or would in any manner have claim, challenge, or demand out of or upon, or from or in respect of, any part of his estate or effects in any manner howsoever. Testator died, leaving a wife & several children; & in the events that happened there was an intestacy as to a part of his personal property:—Held: (1) testator's widow was excluded by the terms of the will from a distributive share of the property so undisposed of; (2) the annuity of £1,200 was not perpetual, but on the death of such child who survived the widow his share should sink into the residue.

(3) If by will, certain terms or a certain condition be annexed to a gift, those terms as much bind the object of the gift who accepted it as if he contracted to abide by the terms or conditions. This is an essential element in the law of election.—LETT v. RANDALL (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 388; 30

S. had but one child, L., & by will bequeathed the £3,000, & also £6,000 of his own money for L.'s benefit, subject to various restrictions, under which pltf. claimed. L. came of age, & by articles on her marriage purporting to be in execution of the trusts of the will, the whole £9,000 was settled to uses partly inconsistent with it:—Held: the articles purporting to be in pursuance of the will, & to settle the whole £9,000, & having been executed by L. with full knowledge of her rights under the settlement, she had elected to take under the will, & that her exor. could not elect to take the £3,000.—BRISCON v. #### 1665. Property brought under will by election—

Liability to contribute pari passu in discharge of debts.—Testator, whose estate consisted chiefly of five leasehold properties, appointed his wife & C. exors. & trustees & gave all his estate to them upon trust to pay to his wife the rents for life, & after her death he left his four leasehold messuages in Q. Street & his six leaseholds in J. Street to his trustees upon trust to pay the income to his daughter, E., for life, & after her death to her children; & after the death of his wife he bequeathed two leaseholds in R. Street & a leasehold villa B. to a niece, & after disposing of the remaining leaseholds in S. Street for the benefit of E. & her children, he bequeathed the residue of his estate to his wife, charged with debts. The property in Q. Street was subject to a mtge. for £318. The property in J. Street was assigned to testator's wife in 1888, & by a deed of Aug. 25, 1909, testator purported to mortgage it to secure £400. This mtge. was existing at his death. The leasehold villa B. was assigned to testator & his wife jointly in 1905, & by a deed of Aug. 15, 1905, they jointly mtgd. the same to secure £400. The other leaseholds in R. & S. Streets were also assigned to testator's wife in 1888. The widow elected to take under the testator's will.

On an originating summons by C. to have it determined how, as between the beneficiaries the two mtges. for £400 respectively & the debts should be borne:—Held: (1) the equities had to be determined as at testator's death, & as to the mtge. of £400, on the J. Street property, created without the knowledge of the wife, Real Estate Charges Act, 1854 (c. 113), did not apply, & this property was not primarily liable for the payment of this mortgage debt; (2) as to the villa B. mortgaged by a deed to which the wife was a party, Real Estate Charges Act, 1854 (c. 113), applied, & the property was primarily liable for the charge upon it; (3) the residue of testator's estate being now insufficient for the payment of debts, the property brought in by reason of the widow's election was liable to contribute pari passu with testator's property in discharging his debts.—Re WILLIAMS, CUNLIFFE v. WILLIAMS, [1915] 1 Ch. 450; 84 L. J. Ch. 578; 110 L. T. 569.

SECT. 5.—ELECTION BY CO-OWNERS.

1666. Right of separate election—Majority cannot bind minority.]—A. being entitled to certain shares in a co. & £6,000 to her separate use, her husband by his will purported to leave it to her with a gift over of it after her death, & gave her considerable benefits in other property. She survived him ten years, & received as part of such benefits £300 a year in lieu of dower, occupied the mansion, etc., & died leaving four children, her sole next of kin:—Held: (1) A. had elected to take under the will, & her children could now elect, some under & some against the will, the majority not binding the minority; (2) the £300 a year must be taken into account, & every benefit given by the will, as to the personal representatives electing to take against it.—FYTCH v. FYTCH (1868), L. R. 7 Eq. 494; 19 L. T. 343.

c. Right of party to elect—Whether affected by lapse of time.]—There is no limitation of the right to elect; it continues, notwithstanding acquiescence, during almost any given lapse of time, unless it can be shown that injury would result to third persons, & that they would be placed in a much worse condition than if the party entitled to elect had elected early;

& secondly, that the party knew he had a right to elect, & not merely the existence of the instrument giving him the right, but the consequence of the instrument upon his rights.—BRICE v. BRICE (1828), 3 Mol. 21.—IR.

The devisee of the Scottish real estate, who was also residuary legatee & one of the exors., had filed a cross bill praying among other things for a general administration of the personality:—Held: under the circumstances the ct. had jurisdiction to direct such inquiries as might be necessary to guide the wife in exercising her right of election, & as far as possible to give effect to it.

1683. Knowledge of duty to elect—Intention that acts should constitute election.]—An obligation to elect, & an actual election are distinct things; & a party can never be held to have actually elected, unless it can be collected from the circumstances, that there was a distinct apprehension in his mind that he was bound to elect, & that his particular acts, alleged to constitute the election, were intended by him to have that effect.

On the marriage of A. with B., a leasehold estate, the property of B. for ninety-seven years, the residue of a term, if B. & her three daughters, or either of them, should so long live, was settled to their joint use during their lives, with remainder to the survivor. A., misconceiving his right, by his will bequeathed the estate to B. for life, remainder to C., D., & E., her daughters, & appointed B. residuary legatee, & sole extrix. On the death of A., B. took possession of the estate, which she held to her death, during a period of fourteen years; & by her will, she gave C. the residue of her personality, & nominated her sole extrix. C., & F., her husband, entered into & retained possession of the leasehold for seventeen years, at the expiration of which C. died. F. obtained letters of administration of C.'s estate, but supposing that her interest in the leasehold premises had been derived under the will of A. & was determined with the life of C., he delivered up them, & the lease, to G. the husband of D. in her right. After G. & D. had held the estate ten years, F., as personal representative of C., brought a bill against those parties, E. & the representative of the surviving trustee in the marriage settlement, alleging ignorance of that document, & praying that the premises & the deeds might be given up to him, & an account taken of the arrears of rent during the occupation of G. & D. G. & D. by their answer, submitted, that B. having accepted A.'s bequest of the residue of his personal estate, must be considered as having made her election to take under his will, & to have confirmed his disposition of the estate; & filed a cross-bill praying that it might be declared, that B. was bound, on the death of A. to make such election, & that she did elect to take the benefit of A.'s will etc. F. by veyed to him by A. The residue of his property was bequeathed to his two sons, W. & J., in equal shares. In 1823, A. conveyed the property to S., testator. Testator died in 1826, without having republished his will, & the property conveyed descended to W., as his heir-at-law. In 1834, W. & J. executed to a subtenant a renewal of some of the premises comprised in the deed of 1823, the deed of renewal reciting that the reversion was vested in them, by means assignment or otherwise. In 1854, W. 1684. ———.]—(1) A party claiming under an instrument, raising, as he contends, a case of election in equity against a party in possession under a legal right, must make out a clear & satisfactory case to entitle him to displace the legal right.

Where, under the will of a son, giving benefits to his father, but of doubtful construction, there was no evidence that the father understood that a case of election was raised by the will, or that in fact he elected to take under it, & to give up estates disposed of by the will, to which he was entitled under a marriage settlement; & where it was in evidence that the father did acts in opposition to the will of the son; & where, by his own will, he so disposed of the estates, that his daughters might either claim life estates under that will, or estates in fee under the will of the son; & it was in evidence that they by letters declared & executed deeds, reciting that they took as tenants for life under the will of their father; & especially where the equity, if any, arose 43 years before the suit, & the daughters had then the opportunity to call on the father to elect & failed to do so:—Held: it was doubtful whether a case of election existed, & a party claiming under the daughters as heir could not assert such right after such lapse of time in a ct. of equity.

(2) Where possession is referable to either of two inconsistent rights, the acts of a party bound to elect, in order to constitute election, must imply a knowledge of the rights, & an intention to elect.—*DILLON v. extent of his rights; & secondly, that having that knowledge, he intended to elect.

Testator having invested a sum of money in stock in the joint names of himself & his wife, gave his freehold & leasehold estates, & the specific stock to her for life, with remainders over, & he appointed her his sole extrix. & residuary legatee. The wife, after her husband's death, had the stock transferred into her own name, & did not include it in the estimate for the purposes of probate. She recovered debts as extrix., occupied one of the houses, & enjoyed the rents of the estates, & on her second marriage she transferred the stock unto the names of herself & of another person, in trust for herself for life for her separate use, & then as she should appoint by will. (2) Where a case of election arises, the person who ought to make it must be shown to have known of his duty to do so, & must be proved to have done such acts as amounted to an election.

(3) Remaining in possession of two estates, held under titles not consistent with each other, affords no decisive proof of that kind. The rule is, that if a party being bound to elect between two properties, not being called upon so to elect, continues in the receipt of the rents & profits of both, such receipt affording no proof of preference, cannot be an election to take the one, & reject the other.

The same rule holds, though the lease at the time of the purchase was vested in a trustee upon trusts, under which he could not have granted a renewal of the underlease, & though the tenant for life outlived, by 25 years, the time at which the underlease would have expired by effluxion of time. A., being tenant for life of a leasehold for years, with remainder to B., after devising one estate to B. in tail, bequeathed to him the leasehold during his life, with remainders over, & gave him also the residue of his real & personal property. B. took possession of the residuary estate; suffered a recovery of the lands devised to him in tail; acted as the absolute owner of the leasehold estate, & outlived the term for which the lease was granted, having previously acquired a new interest in the demised premises:—Held: B. elected to take under the will, & was bound to give effect to the devisee of the leasehold in favour of the remainder-man.—*GIDDINGS v. lots, & set a value upon such lots, & give a copy of such particulars of division & valuation to his (testator's) son; & if within six months after delivery of such copy the son should give notice in writing, under his hand, of his desire to relinquish all or any part of such real estate, his interest in the part of the estate relinquished was to cease, & become vested in the trustees, upon certain trusts, the effect of which would be, out of the relinquished estates, & by a charge on the others, to put all the testator's children on an equality. Provided, that if the son should neglect to give "such notice" or, "by some notice or other writing," to consent to hold all the property on the terms thereinbefore mentioned, & within the time thereinbefore mentioned, then, & as soon as such neglect or refusal should have happened, the interest of the son in all the property was to shift to the trustees as before, testator's wish being to give to each of his children or their representatives one-fifth share of his property; & subject to these provisions, testator devised the estates to his trustees for 500 years, remainder to his son in fee. No allotment or valuation was ever made by the trustees, nor any notice given by the son, but he entered into possession of the estates, & accounted for the rents to the trustees of the father's estates until his death, which happened five years & a half after that of his father:—Held: the son had waived his right to have the estate first valued, & had elected to take the whole, subject to the charge for the benefit of the other children.—*GODWIN v. Testator's estate was involved in difficulties, & the liabilities to be discharged by the son, under the terms of the will, & as a condition of his accepting the bequest, greatly exceeded the value of the bequest:—Held: the son must be deemed to have elected to accept the bequest contained in the will, subject to payment of the debts, funeral & testamentary expenses; but he was not personally liable to pay the same.—*Re COWLEY, SOUCH v. 1702. —.]—A will, attested by two witnesses, contained a devise of freeholds in England to A., testator's son & heir, for life, with remainder to trustees & a devise to them of estates in St. Kitts upon trust to sell & to invest the proceeds in estates in England to be held upon the same trusts. A. was in possession of the English & he received the rents of the St. Kitts estates during his life & with his concurrence the trustees made efforts, though ineffectual, to sell the latter. After the death of A. intestate, trustees contracted to sell one of the St. Kitts estates, but the purchaser refused to complete, on the ground that the will was inoperative in the island & that estates descended upon the heir:—Held: A. had elected to take under the will & his infant heir was bound by his acts, & was a trustee under the Act of 1850, for the person claiming under the will.—DEWAR v. MAITLAND (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 834; 14 L. T. 853; 12 Jur. N. S. 699; 14 W. R. 958.

1703. — Whether mere receipt of income sufficient.—In 1875 & 1876 a husband by two several deeds assigned two policies of assurance upon his own life to trustees upon trust for his wife, her exors., administrators, & assigns absolutely. The deeds contained no power of revocation. In 1883 by deed, executed but not acknowledged by the wife, the husband, with the privity, & consent of his wife, purported to revoke the trusts of the two former deeds, & to resettle the two policies, upon trust for his wife during widowhood, with remainder to his children, & also assigned other property to trustees upon trust to pay a sum due to a creditor, party to the deed, & subject thereto upon the same trusts as were thereby declared of the two policies.

The husband died in 1888. The wife married again in 1891, having up to that date received the income of the additional property settled by the deed of 1883 as well as that of the proceedings of the two policies:—Held: (1) the two policies were not settled to the separate use of the wife; (2) the deed of 1883 was an assignment of a future interest, & should have been acknowledged by the married woman under Malins' Act, 1857 (c. 57); (3) the mere receipt by the wife of the income of the trust moneys, without more, did not amount to an election by her to conform the deed of 1883; (4) the wife was entitled to the proceeds of the two policies absolutely, she accounting for the income received by her from the additional property included in the deed of 1883.—*Re TURNER, TURNER v. Testator's widow, who took other benefits under the will, subsequently sold the cottages to a purchaser without notice of the devise. On the widow's death pltf. claimed compensation against her estate:—Held: the widow had elected to take the cottages against the will, & A. was entitled to

One of the four children of the marriage, a daughter, died in the settlor's lifetime leaving a husband who also died in the settlor's lifetime & two infant children who survived the settlor. The settlor made a will whereby after directing payment of his debts he disposed of personal chattels, gave a number of legacies & amongst others a legacy of £4,500 & part of the residue of his estate, to his nephews & nieces & his two infant great grandchildren above mentioned in equal shares:—Held: the liability under the covenant was not a debt to be paid before the division of residue, & the infants were bound to elect between the benefits under the settlement & under the will, & an inquiry was ordered whether for their benefit to take under the will or under the settlement.—BENNETT v. There was one child of this marriage, & the wife died. The powers were not, nor was either of them, ever exercised. The freeman upon his second marriage assigned personal estate to trustees upon trust to invest & pay the dividends to the second wife for life in case she should survive him, & after her death to assign the capital to the children of the marriage as he & she, or the survivor, should appoint & in default to the children of that marriage who, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares. It was declared that the provision for the wife was not for her jointure or in bar & satisfaction of dower. There were two children of this marriage, & the wife survived. The powers were not, nor was either of them ever exercised. The freeman died intestate. The infants entitled to the settled lands in remainder also took interests under testator's will; but it was not yet clear whether it was altogether to their advantage to elect to take under the will. 1727. ———.]—By a marriage settlement made in Jan. 1874, the wife being an infant, personal property derived under her father's marriage settlement was assigned by the husband & wife to trustees upon the usual trusts. There was a covenant by the husband that he & his wife would so soon as she should attain the age of 21 years convey & assign real & personal property to which she was entitled under the will of her father; & it was provided that if the wife should refuse or neglect to do so it should be lawful for the trustees to accumulate any part of the income payable to her for the other persons interested under the settlement. There was an agreement to settle the wife's after-acquired personal property. The wife, on Apr. 13, 1874, a week after she attained the age of 21, & her husband executed a deed, which she acknowledged, by which she assigned all the personal property expressed to be assigned by the settlement which had not become vested in possession, & conveyed property purported to be conveyed by the settlement upon the trusts thereof. At the date of the settlement she was contingently entitled to a reversionary interest in personal estate, but it was not actually assigned by the deed of confirmation because it did not come within the provisions of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57. It fell into possession, & it was by the direction of the wife & her husband invested in the names of the trustees. The husband had died, & the wife had become of unsound mind, but not so found by inquisition. On summons by the infant children, by their next friend:—Held: (1) the wife could during her coverture elect to confirm the settlement, & that she had by her acts elected; (2) the wife having become of unsound mind, if she had not elected the ct. would have made an election on her behalf, it having jurisdiction to bind the equitable interests of lunatics, not so found by inquisition, when it appeared to be for their benefit.—*WILDER v. A memorandum in writing of this agreement was signed before the marriage by the husband alone, & the settlement therein referred to was, after the marriage, also executed by the husband, but not by the wife. 1743. Satisfaction defined.]—When a thing is to be done, performance of the contract is one thing; satisfaction another & different question. No doubt when a party bound to do something, has not done the precise thing, but something else has been done, intended to be in satisfaction, that will be held a satisfaction (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—WILES v. GRESHAM (1854), 2 Drew. 258; 2 Eq. Rep. 560; 23 L. J. Ch. 667; 2 W. R. 355; 61 E. R. 718; affd. on appeal, 5 De G. M. & G. 770, L. JJ.

1744. —.]—(1) The question whether a gift in a will is a satisfaction of a portion given in a settlement, or a portion in a settlement is an ademption of a gift in a will, is one of intention.

(2) The rule that there is a presumption against double portions is founded on the assumption, that the maker of the second instrument supposed himself to be substantially satisfying the obligations of the first. This rule is much easier of application where the will precedes the settlement than where the settlement precedes the will. In the latter case, the intention to satisfy a covenant must be distinctly expressed, or clearly indicated.

(3) Great differences in the sums given, & in the limitations of the trusts on which they are given, will be taken as indications that the gift in the will was not meant in satisfaction of the covenant.

(4) Where the gift by the will is not to the child, but to trustees to pay debts & legacies, & then to pay the residue to the child, the form of the gift will be taken as an indication that the debt due under the settlement must be satisfied before the residue is declared. B., on the marriage of his daughter, covenanted by settlement to pay to the trustees, three months after demand, £10,000 for the uses of the marriage, with interest till payment. The principal sum was not demanded in his life, but the interest was paid. He afterwards made a will, giving his property to trustees, "in the first place to pay his debts & legacies, etc.," & then to divide the residue into equal moieties, & to transfer the same to his daughters. The trusts created by the will were very different from those created by the settlement:—Held: the gift by the will was not a satisfaction of the covenant in the settlement, & the £10,000 must be deducted from the testator's assets before the residue was divided into moieties.

(5) When a parent has by his will given a portion to his daughter absolutely, & has, by a settlement on her marriage, after the date of his will, secured a sum of like amount for the benefit of her & of her husband & issue, the mere circumstance that she would have taken, under the will, an absolute interest, whereas under the deed she takes only a life interest, raises no difficulty. The parent may reasonably suppose the two gifts to be the same. If the daughter had received the sum under the will, she would probably have settled it in the way in which, by the hypothesis, it was settled in her parent's lifetime (LORD CRANWORTH).

(6) The distinction between ademption & satisfaction lies in this: in ademption the former benefit is given by a will, which is a revocable instrument, & which the testator can alter as he pleases, & consequently when he gives benefits by a deed subsequently to the will, he may, either by express words, or by implication of law, substitute a second gift for the former, which he has the power of altering at his pleasure. Consequently, in this case the law uses the word ademption, because the bequest or devise contained in the will is thereby adeemed, i.e. taken out of the will. But when a father, on the marriage of a child, enters into a covenant to settle either land or money, he is unable to adeem or alter that covenant, & if he give benefits by his will to the same objects, & states that this is to be in satisfaction of the covenant, he necessarily gives the objects of the covenants the right to elect whether they will take under the covenant, or whether they will take under the will. Therefore this distinction is manifest. In cases of satisfaction the persons intended to be benefited by the covenant, who, for shortness, may be called the objects of the covenant, & the persons intended to be benefited by the bequest or devise, i.e. the objects of the bequest, must be the same. In cases of ademption they may be, & frequently are, different (LORD ROMILLY).

A bequest to one person cannot be a satisfaction of a provision by deed for another person; in such a case the intention that the bequest should be subject to the covenant must be clearly expressed; it will not be implied.

(7) Satisfaction is the donation of a thing with the intention that it is to be taken either wholly or in part in extinguishment of some prior claim of the donee (LORD ROMILLY).

A. died in his wife's lifetime & by his will gave all his personal estates to his four exors. & directed them at the end of three years after his death to divide his property in such ways, shares & proportions as to them should appear right. All the exors. either died or renounced, & no division was made by them:—Held: (1) the property was divisible according to Statute of Distributions, 1671 (c. 10), as in a case of absolute intestacy; (2) the widow's distributive share being more than £3,000 was a performance of the covenant in the marriage articles.

(3) A distributive share received by a widow in a case of absolute intestacy is considered a performance of a covenant from the husband that she should on his death receive a sum of money, when her distributive share is equal to that sum (PLUMER, M.R.).

(4) An important distinction exists between satisfaction & performance. Satisfaction supposes intention, it is something different from the subject of the contract & substituted for it; & the question always arises, was the thing done intended as a substitute for the thing covenanted, a question entirely of intent; but with reference to performance, the question is, has that identical act which the party contracted to do been done? 1751. Person making payment must be party bound to pay—Or owner of estates charged with payment.]—(1) A. settled property upon himself for life, with remainder to his children, with power, at his request, to advance any part thereof in his lifetime. Some advances were made to the children expressly under the power, besides which, on the marriage of two of his daughters, A. advanced to them certain sums out of his own moneys, but there was no evidence of an intention to purchase their shares:—Held: the latter advances were not to be treated as a satisfaction, pro tanto, of the daughters' shares under the settlement.

(2) Satisfaction can only arise where the person who makes the payment is himself the party bound to pay, or is the owner of the estate charged with the payment.—SAMUEL v. WARD (1856), 22 Beav. 347; 27 L. T. O. S. 164; 2 Jur. N. S. 962; 4 W. R. 540; 52 E. R. 1141.

1752. Application to power of appointment.]—By his will, dated in 1869, a testator, who had a power under the settlement upon his first marriage to appoint certain funds in favour of all & every one or more of his children, grandchildren or other issue by any marriage, appointed the same equally among all the children of his second marriage, who should be living at his death. There were seven children, all of whom survived him. By two deeds executed respectively in 1897 & 1901 he appointed a seventh share of the settled funds to each of two of these children. He died in 1910:—Held: the rule against double portions applied, & consequently the children to whom appointments had been made by deed were not entitled to any further share under the will.—Re PEEL'S SETTLEMENT, BIDDULPH v. 1753. —.]—Testatrix, under her father's will had power with the consent of her husband to appoint by deed or will a fund of £40,000 between her seven children. In 1891, 1892 & 1894 she appointed by deed one equal seventh of the fund to each of three children on the occasion of his or her marriage. In 1895 she appointed by will the remaining four-sevenths between the remaining four children, one of whom was H. In 1899 she appointed by deed one equal seventh of the fund to H. on the occasion of his marriage. These appointments were all made with the consent of the husband of the testatrix & subject to their respective life interests, & each of the four appointments by deed comprised an equal seventh of certain other personal property brought into settlement by the husband & similarly appointed by him & the testatrix under a joint power of appointment contained in their marriage settlement. The will of the testatrix also appointed certain real estate to her children successively in tail male, subject to a life interest in her husband, & declared that the same estate should, when & as soon as any child should become entitled thereto in possession, be charged with a sum equal in value to the one-seventh of the £40,000 to which the child so succeeding should have become entitled, such sum to be held in trust for her other children living at her death & the children of any other child who might have died in her lifetime in equal shares per stirpes. The husband survived the testatrix & died in 1916:—Held: apart from any presumption against double portions there was sufficient on the face of the documents & in the circumstances of the case to show an intention on the part of the testatrix to insure equality between her children, & that the appointment of one-seventh to H. by the deed of 1899 was intended to be in satisfaction or lieu of the one-seventh already appointed to him by the will.—Re EARDLEY'S WILL, SIMEON v. 1754 i. Intention of donor governing factor.]—A testator devised land to trustees upon trust to convert & invest the proceeds in trust for A. After making his will, the testator sold the land on terms of payment by instalments; at the date of his death the purchase moneys had not been fully paid, & the land had not been conveyed to the purchaser:—Held: the testator's dealing with the land was so inconsistent with the terms of the will as to amount to an ademption of the gift.—READ v. 1754 ii. —.]—By his will made in May, 1915, testator gave a share of residue to his son & his daughter. Testator died in Aug. 1915. In 1913, the daughter became engaged to be married & testator then promised her a furnished house as a wedding present. After the marriage, which took place in Jan. 1914, testator bought a block of land which was transferred to the daughter & arranged for a cottage to be built on the land. After May, 1916, testator gave orders for the furniture for the cottage which was supplied in Aug.:—Held: the gift of the furniture was not an ademption pro tanto of the share of residue given by the will, there being evidence that the gift made by testator to his daughter on her marriage was intended to include both the house & the furniture.—PARKER v. 1755. —.]—Where a person, for a valuable consideration, covenants to make a settlement upon the issue of the marriage & to limit a remainder to his own right heirs if all the issue of the marriage die the ct. will decree a satisfaction to the heir-at-law, notwithstanding he is a volunteer; for what is regarded in equity in cases of this nature is the intention of the person making the covenant which appears to be that so much of his personal estate should be applied in the purchase of lands for the uses in the covenant (LORD HARDWICKE, C.). —ELLINOR v. GARTON (1745), 9 Mod. Rep. 480; 88 E. R. 588, L. C.

1756. —.]—By will, dated in 1827, the testator bequeathed to C., to whom he stood in loco parentis, a particular legacy of £12,000 charged on a family estate, & also made him residuary legatee. In 1832 C. married, & the testator on his marriage settlement covenanted that his exors. should within six months of his decease, pay £10,000 to the trustees of the settlement, upon usual marriage settlement trusts for the benefit of C., his wife & issue; & it was provided that any gift inter vivos or by will by the testator to C., for his own benefit, should be taken to be a satisfaction of the covenant pro tanto & should not be subject to the trusts of the settlement. By codicil in 1833 the testator confirmed his will in other respects but he directed that £5,000 out of the £12,000 charged on the family estate, & £5,000 out of his general residue, should be given in satisfaction of his covenant; & he again appointed C., his sole residuary legatee. By a second codicil the testator confirmed all previous gifts & arrangements, but gave his residuary estate to C. & H. equally declaring at the same time that the two sums of £5,000 & £5,000 were to be in satisfaction of the covenant:—Held: notwithstanding the proviso in the settlement, that gifts to C. by the testator for his own benefit should be in satisfaction of the covenant pro tanto & should not be subject to the trusts of the settlement, yet here the testator had sufficiently declared his mind that the gifts to C., were not to be in satisfaction of the covenant, but that the £5,000 & £5,000 were to be paid to the trustees on the trusts of the settlement.—MILLIGAN v. HARDWICKE (EARL) (1855), 25 L. T. O. S. 327; 1 Jur. N. S. 793.

1757. —.]—By a marriage settlement in 1802, two several sums of £1,000 were to be paid by A., the father of the intended wife, to trustees, for the husband & wife & their children. One of these sums was payable immediately, & the other on the death of A. In 1806 & 1810 respectively, A. advanced two sums of £1,000 each to the husband who signed a receipt for the same on the back of the settlement. In 1817, shortly before the death of A., he settled £5,000 on his daughter & her husband & issue, on trusts almost identical with those of the settlement of 1802, & contemporaneously he made his will, wherein he stated "Whereas I have advanced to my two sons & to my daughter J. & her husband, in money, stock & by other means in value to a considerable amount, now to prevent any question whether such advancements were meant & intended as loans or gifts, I hereby declare they were gifts, & not loans; & it is my will & intention, that as well what I have already given as what I give by this my will to my said sons & to my daughters J. & E. they shall receive & take in full satisfaction & discharge of all claims & demands upon me in any right or manner whatsoever." Eleven years after the death of the daughter J. & her husband, pltf., who had married one of their children, filed his bill against the representative of the surviving trustee of the settlement of 1802, claiming his wife's share in the two several sums of £1,000 under that settlement:—Held: though the trustees might have had no direct defence against the claim, yet having regard to the provision in A.'s will, & inasmuch as his estate would be ultimately liable, such claim was circuitously barred.—DAVIS v. CHAMBERS (1857), 7 De G. M. & G. 386; 28 L. T. O. S. 348; 3 Jur. N. S. 207; 5 W. R. 245; 44 E. R. 150, L. C.

1758. —.]—The presumption of law is against double portions; where a sum of money is given by the will of a parent to a particular child, & the like sum is afterwards secured by a settlement on the marriage of that child, there is a presumption in favour of the ademption of the legacy, but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence of intention to the contrary. The burden of proof of intention is on the person claiming the double portion. It is not necessary that the legacy should be paid in order that it may be adeemed.

A father made his will, giving to each of his three younger children £5,000. On the marriage of one of them, a daughter, he paid to the husband £2,000. By a codicil he declared that sum to be in part satisfaction of the £5,000. One of his younger sons, F., married. On that marriage, the father entered into a covenant that he would cause to be paid to the trustees of the marriage, within twelve months after his death, the sum of £5,000, with interest in the meantime, at the rate of five per cent., such interest to be employed in the payment of premiums on life policies. By a codicil made after the date of this settlement, the testator recited what he had given by his will to each of his two younger sons, & directed his trustees to raise a "farther sum of £7,000" for each of them, & to hold such farther sum on the same trusts as those of the £5,000. The testator afterwards raised a sum of £5,000, with which he purchased a Lieutenant-colonelcy in the Guards for his other younger son, H., & he then made a codicil, declaring that this sum, so laid out, was to be taken by H. in satisfaction of the legacy given him by the will:—Held: these circumstances did not show an intention on the part of the testator rebutting the presumption that the £5,000 given by the will to F., were adeemed by the settlement.

I entirely concur that is a question of intention, & that the object is to ascertain the intention of the parties (LORD CAMPBELL, C.).—HOPWOOD v. HOPWOOD (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 728; 29 L. J. Ch. 747; 34 L. T. O. S. 56; 5 Jur. N. S. 807; 11 E. R. 290, H. L.

He directed that if E. or W., or either of them, should at any time during their joint lives or the life of the survivor of them advance or pay any sum or sums of money for the use or benefit of any younger child or children for whom portions were provided, then & in such case, unless the contrary should be directed by E. & W., or the survivor of them, by deed or writing to be sealed & delivered in the presence of one or more witnesses, the sum or sums so advanced should be taken in satisfaction pro tanto of the portion or portions of such child or children. 1768. ———.]—By conduct of testator.]—Testator by his will, dated in 1908, bequeathed a legacy of £300 to D., his housekeeper & nurse. On Apr. 15, 1909, he wrote a letter addressed to her, enclosing a cheque, in which he requested her to tell his exors. that the cheque was instead of the £300 left her by his will. The contents of the letter were not communicated to her, but the letter with the cheque were in her presence sealed up in an envelope & placed in a drawer by testator, who called her attention to the matter & told her to open the envelope on his death. In Dec. 1910, testator requested D. to get the envelope, & he opened it in her presence. He took out the cheque & put the letter without the cheque into another envelope, sealed it, & told her to keep it & open it on his death. He subsequently sent the cheque or another for a similar amount to his bankers with instructions to place the money to the credit of a joint account in the names of himself & D., with power to either party to draw, & this was accordingly done. The letter was opened & read by D. for the first time on testator's death:—Held: (1) there was nothing in the transaction to affect the conscience of D. & to preclude her from claiming both the legacy & the gift; (2) the letter of Apr. 15, 1909, was not admissible in evidence to prove that the testator intended that the gift should be in substitution for the legacy; (3) D. was entitled to both the legacy & the gift.—Re SHIELDS, CORBOULD-ELLIS v. ### SECT. 3.—PRESUMPTION AGAINST DOUBLE PORTIONS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1769. Nature of presumption.—(1) A grandfather having, in the opinion of the ct., placed himself in loco parentis to certain grandchildren, although their father was living, & having given them certain sums by his will, & having afterwards made settlements upon their respective marriages:—Held: the presumption against double portions was applicable.

All the decisions upon questions of double portions depend upon the declared or presumed intention of the donor. The presumption of equity is against double portions, because it is not thought probable, when the object appears to be to make a provision & that object has been effected by one instrument, that the repetition of it in a second should be intended as an addition to the first. The second provision, therefore, is presumed to be intended as a substitution for, & not as an addition to, that first given; but, when the gift is a mere bounty there is no ground for raising any presumption of intention as to its amount, although such amount be comprised in two or more gifts (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).

(2) Inasmuch as the advancements were smaller in amount than the sums expressed to be given by the will:—Held: such advancements were satisfactions pro tanto only of the gifts contained in the will.—PYM v. LOCKYER (1841), 5 My. & Cr. 29; 10 L. J. Ch. 153; 5 Jur. 620; 41 E. R. 283, L. C.

1770.—Reid.—A testator by his will gave his shares in a partnership business to his three sons equally as tenants in common. At the date of his will he had twenty-one twenty-fourth shares in the business, & E., one of his said sons, was employed in the business as a manager, at a salary; the other two sons were not employed in the business. Subsequently, E. pressed for an increase of his salary, & eventually testator arranged a new deed of partnership under which E. was admitted a partner, testator making over to him two of his twenty-one shares, & E. accepted the position & relinquished his salary as manager, but received instead his proportion of the profits as a partner, which was greater in amount. On the death of testator, E. claimed to be a purchaser for value of his two shares in the partnership, & to be entitled to shares equally with his brothers in the remaining nineteen shares of the testator:—Held: assuming that the two shares which E. received in testator's lifetime were given him by way of portion, the presumption against double portions was rebutted by the circumstances under which he received them, which showed that testator intended him to have a greater share in the business than his brothers.

In order to establish a case for the application of this rule as to double portions, there must be two matters made out, & it will be seen upon reflection that there are two presumptions really which are to be considered, & not one. In the first place, both of the suggested gifts or donations must be gifts in the nature of a portion. The first presumption here comes under discussion; it is said that, whatever gifts are made by the father, which it may be supposed will have to be distributed among the children, or which are given by the father to one child with a view to establishing him in life, are presumed to be portions within the meaning of the rule. We have, therefore, to ask ourselves, in the first place, were these two shares which were received during the lifetime of the father received under such circumstances as to justify their being treated & considered as a portion? But, supposing both gifts are gifts in the nature of portions, then comes a further question, for the solution of which a further presumption is invoked. That question is, whether it was intended that the former gift or portion should take the place of an advancement of the gift which is given by the will, & there the second presumption which is invoked has to be dealt with—a presumption to the effect that the former gift, the gift inter vivos, was intended as an advancement pro tanto of the gift under the bequest—a presumption, it is said, which ought to be made in favour of equality amongst children, it being the view of the law that equality is what the father, in dealing with his children, would, in most cases, presumably intend (BOWEN, L.J.).—Re LACON, LACON v. LACON, [1891] 2 Ch. 482; 60 L. J. Ch. 403; 64 L. T. 429; 39 W. R. 514; 7 T. L. R. 457, C. A.

A. Ademption of Legacy.

(a) In General.

1774. Whether adeemed by gifts made before will.]—Father advanced some of his children with portions in his lifetime, & then made his will; & thereby recited he had advanced B. & C. but omitted reciting D., whom he had also advanced, & left to him a sum certain, & devised the residue equally among them:—Held: the money, which D. had received, should go in satisfaction of the legacy left him.—*UPTON v. 1775. —.]—Testator gave to three of his sons T., J., & P., legacies of £500 each, & to his daughter £200, & directed that neither of his sons to whom he should have advanced any sums of money in his lifetime should be entitled to receive his legacy of £500 without bringing such sums into hotch-pot. The residue of his property he divided between his four sons, C., T., J. & P., & his daughter. Testator had advanced to C., at different periods before the date of his will, £500, £170 & £58 & to T., after the date of his will, £500 & £380:—Held: the advances to C. should not be taken into account against him, but the £300 to T. was a satisfaction of his legacy, & £380, being advanced after the date of the will, must be deducted from his share of the residue.

The general rule is that whenever a testator gives an equal amount to all his children & directs that any sums advanced shall be taken as part of the legacies, all money advanced after the date of the will, except small sums given from time to time, must be accounted for (MALINS, V.-C.).—Re PEACOCK'S ESTATE (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 236; sub nom. OWEN v. PEACOCK, 27 L. T. 472.

1776. —.]—There is no presumption of law that the payment of a sum of money to a child, even by a father, before the date of his will, is to go against a legacy, bequeathed by the will to that child.

M. by her will dated Mar. 30, 1848, bequeathed her residuary personalty to her two sons, E. & T., upon trust for them, & her son J., & her married daughter A., equally. A.'s share was left to her for life, for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation & on her death to her children. M. died on Mar. 31, 1848. In 1850 a family arrangement was entered into by two deeds, one a declaration of trust, the other a release, for the division of testatrix's property among her children. The release was executed by A., but not by her husband, & it contained a recital that testatrix during her lifetime advanced to A., the wife of R. with his privity & consent the sum of £400 in part of & to be deducted out of, any money which testatrix might leave by will to A. or her issue. The division of the property was made on the assumption that the recital was true; & it was said that T. had had his share, less a like sum of £400. The trustees of the will had both since died & their legal personal representatives were depts. A. died in 1870, leaving her husband & six children. The children filed a bill against depts. to compel them to make A.'s share of testatrix's property good, by the addition to it of the £400, deducted in 1850:—Held: the recital was not binding on A. in her lifetime, & therefore not effectual as against plffs.; (2) there was no such presumption in law as that above stated; (3) A.'s husband was not bound by the recital; (4) depts. must pay the £400 or other the proper sum to plffs., with interest at 4 per cent. from their mother's death.—TAYLOR v. CARTWRIGHT (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 167; 41 L. J. Ch. 529; 26 L. T. 571; 20 W. R. 603.

By marriage settlement an estate was limited to trustees for a term of years to raise a sum of £12,000 for the portions of younger children of the settlor as he should appoint. Two of the younger children, on their marriage being paid certain sums, released their shares. The settlor by his will, in 1866, devised the estate to trustees for a lesser term of years, & subject thereto, to his eldest son in strict settlement, the trust of the term being to raise & pay, within three months of his death, to two other younger children, plffs., C. & M., the sums of £4,000 & £8,000, the same to be accepted by them in full satisfaction and discharge of their shares of the £12,000. Testator also gave C. & M. annuities for life, or until marriage, charged upon the same estates, & other annuities charged upon another estate, & others devised to his younger son in satisfaction & discharge of, his share of the sum mentioned in the settlement. Between the dates of will & his death, & also before the date of the will, the settlor gave to C. & M. sums of money, & transferred to them certain stocks:—Held: the legacies were adeemed pro tanto by the gifts of stock made after the date of the will.

After the date of the will testator gave to his daughter & her husband a promissory note for £500 then due to testator. In a suit by the children of the daughter against the son, claiming to have the legacy of £3,000 invested & secured for their benefit, defendant tendered parol evidence that after the date of the will testator was requested by his daughter to confer some benefit on her husband, & that, thereupon, testator gave her the promissory note, declaring that it was to be in part satisfaction of the legacy of £3,000; & testator was advised by his solicitor that it was not necessary to alter his will to give it that effect.—Held: (1) this evidence was admissible as constituting an essential part of a transaction subsequent to, & independent of, the will, of which subsequent transactions there was no evidence in writing; (2) the parol evidence was not received as revocation or alteration of any part of the will, but as evidence of transaction, whereby the legatee had received part of her legacy by anticipation; (3) the advance to the daughter & her husband was an ademption pro tanto of the legacy bequeathed by the will for the benefit of the daughter & her children.

But those circumstances are very material with reference to the weight & efficacy of it. Presumed satisfaction of a legacy by a portion ; the evidence not being sufficient to rebut the presumption.

(2) Where a parent, or person in loco parentis, gives a legacy as a portion, & afterwards upon marriage or any other occasion calling for it advances in the nature of a portion to that child, that will amount to an ademption of the gift by the will, & the ct. will presume he meant to satisfy the one by the other. It differs from the performance or satisfaction of a covenant in this : that the ct. overlooks small differences in the circumstances of that which is proposed to be given & that in satisfaction of which it is contended to be given. The ct. does not inquire whether the portion by the will is entirely & absolutely to the child, or what is afterwards advanced in this form ; a settlement upon marriage ; which not being a performance of a covenant or satisfaction of a debt yet is a presumed satisfaction of the intended portion (LORD ELDON, C.).—*TRIMMER v. Deft. had joined, as surety, with the intestate in giving a security for certain loans which had been procured by her for her own purposes, & he claimed to retain out of the assets of the intestate, in, or coming to his hands as administrator, a sum sufficient to repay these loans with interest. He had not in fact repaid them, although he was personally liable to do so. Deft. was at one period engaged in farming, & the intestate from time to time made him small advances when he was in want of money to assist him in carrying on his business, or for his maintenance. The intestate never attempted to recover these moneys, & she took no acknowledgment for them. Pltfs. sought to charge deft. with the moneys so received by him. By the chief clerk's certificate it was certified, amongst other things, that deft. had made the claim above mentioned, which the chief clerk had allowed, & that pltfs. had brought in the set-off before referred to, but which the chief clerk had disallowed. 1840. —.]—A father by his will made in 1891 gave the residue of his estate on trust for his children living at his death in specified proportions, & he declared that if any child should die in his lifetime, leaving a child or children who being a son or sons should attain 21, or being a daughter or daughters should attain that age or marry under that age, such child or children should take, & if more than one equally between them, the share which his or their parent would have taken in testator's residuary estate if the parent had survived him. Testator also declared that the sum of £5,000, which he had already given to each of his daughters was not to be brought into account in ascertaining the share of a daughter in his residuary estate. Testator carried on business in partnership with his eldest son J. The partnership deed provided that the son should not withdraw any part of his capital without his father's consent. In 1892 testator voluntarily gave his second son A. a sum of £5,000. In 1894 testator made a codicil slightly altering his will, & in all other respects confirming it. In 1897, at the request of the son J., who had overdrawn his capital & was in pecuniary difficulties, testator transferred £5,000 from his own capital account in the books of the firm to the capital account of the son, & also gave him £1,500 to enable him to pay off in part a mortgage debt. In Jan., 1899, the son J. died, leaving an only daughter who afterwards married. In May, 1899, the father died, leaving the son A. & six daughters surviving him. Two of the daughters deposed to conversations with their father in which he spoke of the payment of the £5,000 to his son A., & led them to believe that he never intended that that sum should be taken into account on his own death, but should be treated in the same manner as the two sums of £5,000 given to themselves were to be treated:—Held: the legal presumption that the gifts made by testator to his two sons were intended as portions was under the circumstances rebutted, & those sums ought not to be brought into account in the distribution of the testator's estate; the daughter of the son J. stood in the same position as her father, so that, if he would have had to account for the sums given to him by his father in his lifetime, she would have been equally liable to account for them.—Re SCOTT, LANGTON v. From then until her death in 1922 the Master in Lunacy from time to time directed the receiver to make allowances out of her surplus income to various members of the family of testatrix, including sons' wives & grandchildren, with provisions for such allowances to be treated as advancements & to be brought into hotchpot against the respective shares, if any, under the will of testatrix of the recipients or of their husbands or issue. The directions were not made in the presence of the parties who were to be accountable. Some of such parties predeceased testatrix, others took only life interests, & others again were infants:—Held: the directions that the allowances should be vested as advancements & brought into hotchpot were only binding so far as they could affect the consciences of the recipients, & the ct. in administering testatrix's estate had a discretion not to enforce them & would not do so, as by reason of the terms of testatrix's will & the events which had happened the directions would not do equity.—Re MERRALL, GREENER v. MERRALL, [1924] 1 Ch. 45; 93 L. J. Ch. 162; 130 L. T. 312; 68 Sol. Jo. 209.

1868. General rule.—A legacy, by a stranger, to a female infant, not adeemed by his paying a marriage portion, & making other provisions for her & her husband.

The word "portion," although applied in the case of a parent, shall not be so applied to the gifts of other relations or friends: it has been determined not to extend to a grandfather. Whatever foundation there might be for the original application of the rule, that the advancement of a parent shall not be a further gift, it is not now to be disputed: but it is obvious the intent of testator is as often disappointed as served by it (LORD THURLOW, C.).—*POWELL v. 1869. —.]—(1) In cases in which a parent or persons standing in loco parentis, advances a portion to a child for whom he has already made a testamentary provision, the ct. leans against double portions; but the second gift, if less in amount, will not be an ademption in toto, but only pro tanto, of the testamentary provision.

(2) Where there is a marked difference between the two gifts, or in amount, in the motive assigned to each, in the mode of enjoyment, etc., that is taken as a circumstance rebutting the presumption that one was intended to be in satisfaction of the other.

(3) Where however the gifts are to a stranger, they are held to be mere bounty, which is purely arbitrary, & which the ct. sees no reason to limit.

(4) Where legacies are given by different instruments the presumption is primâ facie, that two legacies were intended; but where the bounty given by the second instrument is actually a repetition of that which has gone before, the ct. will sometimes presume that the second was intended to be repetition & not accumulation; but the mere fact that the amounts are the same is not such an identification of the second with the first as would prevent both taking effect. If however in addition to the amount being the same, testator connects any motive with both, & the motive as expressed is the same there, the double coincidence induces the ct. to believe that repetition & not accumulation was intended. In every other case, the ct. having no means whatever of measuring the bounty, does not infer that repetition was the object, unless it be so declared or unless it is to be collected from the words of the will itself, that such really was the intention of testator.—*SUISSE v. R. was married in the lifetime of testator, who subsequently advanced to her husband £800 in detached sums:—Held: the advances were pro tanto in satisfaction of the legacy.

It is the settled law that a child or a person standing in that relation shall not be entitled to a double portion; & therefore in bringing evidence forward in such a case you are in fact showing that testator has, as it were, become his own exor., by performing in his lifetime the obligation which he has imposed on his estate by his will. In the case of a stranger the law raises no presumption, & therefore to let in parol evidence in such a case would be to attempt to alter or explain by parol evidence a written instrument (WOOD, V.-C.).—*FERRIS v. (2) In such a case parol evidence may be adduced to prove the intention against a double provision, as well as on the question whether the testator was in loco parentis.

Qu.: whether, if testator was not to be considered in loco parentis, parol evidence of his intention not to make a double provision by will & settlement would be admissible.

(3) It being proved by parol evidence that testator intended the provision made by the settlement to be in lieu of a legacy given by the will:—Held: the settlement was a satisfaction of the legacy, though the two provisions differed so much from each other that they could not be considered substantially the same.—*BOOKER v. By her will she gave the residue of her estate to her daughter-in-law for life, & after her death to the son & the daughter of the daughter-in-law:—Held: (1) under the circumstances, the sums of stock so purchased were a gift to the son of the daughter-in-law; (2) in such a case the evidence of the son & his wife was admissible, & could not be disregarded as rebutting the presumption of a resulting trust; & coupled with the circumstances under which the stock was purchased, it was sufficient to rebut the presumption; (3) testatrix had not placed herself in loco parentis to the son of her daughter-in-law or to the other residuary legatee, & both these facts would have to be proved to make the gift an ademption of the residuary bequest.

The rule of law is that legacies given by a father or a person in loco parentis are or may be adeemed by gifts between the will & death. The principle is that the will shows the distribution which the father thinks just & expedient for his children & if after having made such a scheme for distribution, he advances one of his children on marriage or going out to establish himself in the world, or the like, it is to be presumed as a presumptio juris et de jure that the advancement is an anticipation of the testamentary disposition (JAMES, L.J.).

1885. ———.]—A father by will gave the residue to his three natural children. In the case of illegitimate children, the author of the bounty being considered only in the light of a stranger an instrument is often held no satisfaction as to such objects which in a case between parents & children generally would certainly be held a satisfaction. He afterwards gave two of them marriage portions:—Held: not to be a satisfaction pro tanto.—SMITH v. STRONG (1794), 4 Bro. C. C. 493; 29 E. R. 1006.

1886. ———.]—(1) In the case of children whose relation as such the law recognises, the doctrine of presumption is that a subsequent advancement is a satisfaction of a legacy to such child, but as the law does not recognise the relation between the putative father & illegitimate child so imposing this debt of nature the father in that case stands as a stranger & no such presumption arises in that case where the subsequent advance is not proved to have been for the very purpose of satisfying the legacy, & therefore the legatee is entitled to both (LORD ELDON, C.).

(2) Where a parent gives a legacy to a child not stating the purpose with reference to which he gives it, the court understands him as giving a portion, & by a sort of artificial rule, upon an artificial notion, that the father is paying a debt of nature, & a sort of feeling upon what is called a leaning against double portions, if the father afterwards advances a portion on the marriage of that child, though of less amount, it is a satisfaction of the whole or in part (LORD ELDON, C.).—*Ex p. There was a proviso in the settlement that in case the daughters should be advanced with portions in money or lands, equal in value to the portions thereby provided in the lifetime of G., or he should give or leave them money or lands not equal in value, the trustees should raise only so much as should make the money, or value of the lands so given, equal to the portions provided. Applf. F., being the only daughter of the marriage,

1920. Legacy of larger amount.—A. by marriage settlement, granted certain lands to trustees, to raise the sum of £3,000 for the children of the marriage, in such shares as A. should appoint, & in default of appointment equally among them. A. had three sons & six daughters. The power of appointment was never exercised. A., by his will, bequeathed his real-estate, which realised a clear fund, exceeding what his daughters would have been entitled to under the settlement, upon trust, after the death of his wife to pay each of his daughters one-sixth of the interest while unmarried, & a like share of the principal on marriage with consent, with a gift over to the survivors of the share of any daughter dying unmarried:—Held: the provision made by the will operated as a satisfaction of the portions given to the daughters by the settlement.—Re BATTERSBY'S ESTATE, KILBEE, PETITIONER (1888), 19 L. She will have a share of what I leave after the death of her mother, who I wish to leave in comfortable independence if I should leave her a widow." The intended husband accepted the letter as giving him some rights, & the marriage took place. The father afterwards acquired a large fortune, & died in 1898. His wife predeceased him. By his will he left a legacy of £2,000 to the daughter, & gave the residue of his estate equally between six of his other seven children. The daughter & her husband claimed by virtue of the letter to be entitled to an equal eighth share of the father's estate:—Held: (1) the letter did not constitute a contract by the father, but was merely an expression of his intentions; (2) if it were a contract, it was an obligation to leave, not an equal eighth share, but some portion or share of his estate to the daughter, & was fulfilled by the legacy.—*Re FICKUS, FARINA v. 1929. Right of beneficiary to elect to take under will or settlement.—A father made a voluntary settlement to trustees & their heirs, in trust, to receive the profits, & to put them out for the increase of the fortunes of his daughters A. & B., & also executed a bond to the same trustees to pay them £1,000 at a certain day, in trust for the said daughters, but kept both deed & bond by him till his death, & received the profits; & then by will taking notice of the bond, gave legacies to A. & B. in satisfaction thereof, & the surplus of his personal estate to his said two daughters, & his four younger children. default of appointment, equally amongst them; to daughters at eighteen years of age or marriage, to sons at 21; & declared that the legacies of £1,500 & £3,500 were in full discharge of the bond:—Held: a party must elect to claim under the bond or will, but could not claim under both.

1935. Election under will—Right to take under ultimate limitation of settlement.—By marriage settlement £1,000 was to be laid out, to the use of the wife for life, with remainder, in case she should survive, to her; & if the husband should survive, then to such uses as the wife should appoint; in default of appointment, to such person as the same would have gone unto by the Statute of Distribution, 1671 (c. 10), in case the wife had died unmarried. She died without appointment, leaving a daughter. The father gave to the daughter a real estate in fee, in performance of the covenant:—Held: it was a case of election, but the daughter, electing to take under the will, took the personalty as next of kin.—*HOARE v. 1936. —Effect of election after bankruptcy of husband—On real & personal property.—Under the settlement made upon the marriage of M., his daughter C. became, upon his death, subject to the rights of her husband, tenant in tail in possession of certain real estate & absolutely entitled to a share of the personalty. M. by his will gave to C. an annuity of larger value than her share under the settlement for her separate use, which she was required to accept in lieu of her share under the settlement. C.'s husband was an insolvent, & his assignee refused to give up her husband's interest in the settled property:—Held: (1) as to the share of personalty, which was outstanding in trustees, the ct., electing on C.'s behalf to take under the will, could order it to be made over in accordance with the testator's directions; (2) as to the realty, the ct. could not affect the estate which had passed to the assignee, & C. must make compensation to the amount of rents & profits withheld.—GRIGGS v. GIBSON, MAYNARD v. GIBSON (1866), L. R. 1 Eq. 685; 35 L. J. Ch. 457; 14 W. R. 513.

1937. —By tenant for life under settlement—On subsequent interests.—A father, upon the marriage of his son, covenanted, by will or otherwise in his lifetime, to give or assure one-fifth part of the real & personal estate to which he might be entitled at or immediately before his death, subject to the payment thereof of one-fifth of his debts, funeral, & testamentary expenses, & legacies, to trustees upon trust to pay the income to the son until, among other things, some event should occur whereby the income would, if the same were thereby made payable to the son absolutely, become vested in some other person or persons; & then upon trusts for the benefit of the son's wife & the issue of the marriage, with a discretionary trust for the benefit of the son after his wife's death. By his will, the father directed his debts to be paid by his exors., & charged them, as far as the law permitted, on all his real & personal estate; & he gave his real & personal estate to trustees in trust for all & every of his children who should be living at the time of his death. The father died leaving five children:—Held: (1) the gift in the will did not operate as a satisfaction of the covenant in the settlement so far as the wife & children of the son were concerned; (2) the trustees were entitled to one-fifth part of the testator's real & personal estate, after payment of his debts, legacies, & funeral & testamentary expenses; (3) the gift in the will did operate as a satisfaction of all the interest of the son under the settlement, & the son must therefore elect between his life interest under the settlement & one-fifth of the residue which would remain after satisfaction of the covenant.

(4) The son electing to take under the will:—Held: such election determined his life interest under the settlement, & the income became payable to his wife.—MCCAROGHER v. WHIELDON (1867), L. R. 3 Eq. 236; sub nom. MCCAROGHER v. WHIELDON, WHIELDON v. MCCAROGHER, 36 L. J. Ch. 196; 15 W. R. 296.

The husband & wife joined in a direction to the trustees reciting their resolution to invest the trust fund in an estate lately purchased by the husband for £16,300 & directing them to deliver the stock, etc., to him at the price they were at the date of the purchase, which was done. The wife died. There were two daughters. The father by will, reciting the purchase & that he had not conveyed it to the uses of the settlement, & that it was not his intention that the purchase should be an investment of the trust fund, but that the fund with its increase should be taken out of his personal estate, gave £10,000 part of the trust fund in trust to be laid out in land to be conveyed to one daughter for life for her separate use, remainder to her children in tail, remainder to the other daughter in fee for whom he also appointed the residue of the fund, but revoked that by codicil reciting a portion given on her marriage:—Held: the share of the daughter, to whom the portion was advanced on marriage, was thereby satisfied.—SMITH v. The marriage took effect, & the wife died in the lifetime of W., leaving seven children, W. married again, & by a deed made in contemplation of that marriage, he conveyed land to trustees, upon trust after his death, or in his lifetime if he should consent, to raise £800 in trust for the six younger children of his first marriage, to be divided between them in equal shares, such shares to be vested in them at 21. But this presumption may be rebutted by evidence of a different intention; as, for example, that the advance was made in substitution for an appointment out of the portion fund for the purpose of giving a sum in cash in lieu of a mere charge.

1947. — Gift in lifetime of testator.]—(1) The doctrine of ademption of legacies founded on parental or quasi-parental relation applies also to cases where a moral obligation other than parental or quasi-parental is recognised in the will, though without reference to any special application of the money.

Testatrix by her will bequeathed to a niece of her deceased husband £500 with these words, "according to the wish of my late beloved husband," & she afterwards in her lifetime paid £300 to such legatee, with a contemporaneous entry in her diary that such payment was a "legacy from 'the legatee's' uncle John":—Held: the presumption was that such legacy was adeemed to the extent of £300, & such presumption of ademption pro tanto only was not displaced by evidence that more than a year before the £300 was given testatrix had said, that the legatee when then asked by testatrix whether she would rather receive £300 down than a larger sum after testatrix's death, had replied that she would prefer the £300 down.

(2) If a legacy appears on the face of the will to be bequeathed, though to a stranger, for a particular purpose & a subsequent gift appears by proper evidence to have been made for the same purpose, a presumption is raised prima facie in favour of ademption (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(3) To constitute a particular purpose within the meaning of that doctrine it is not necessary that some special use or application of the money by or on behalf of the legatee should be in testator's view (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—Re POLLOCK, *POLLOCK v. 1949. —.]—Testator by his will, after directing his debts to be paid, gave a share of his residuary estate upon trust for one of his daughters for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common, with remainders over in favour of the other children of testator. Subsequently to the date of the will the daughter married & upon the occasion of the marriage a settlement was executed to which testator was a party, by which, after a recital of an agreement by testator to give his daughter a portion of £5,000, whereof £1,000 was to be paid to the husband & £4,000 to be a provision for the daughter, her husband, & their issue, testator covenanted to pay £4,000 to the trustees in his lifetime, or within two years after his death, to be held upon trusts for the benefit of the husband & wife & their children, & in case of there being no issue of the marriage who should attain 21 as testator should appoint, & in default of appointment for his next of kin. The sum of £1,000 was paid to the husband, who died leaving his wife surviving him. No child of the marriage lived to take a vested interest under the settlement:—Held: (1) the gift of residue in favour of the daughter was adeemed to the extent of the £4,000 covenanted to be paid by testator; (2) there was no ademption as to the £1,000 given to the husband absolutely.

(3) When the question is one of testamentary intention the fact that a gift of a share of residue is preceded by a direction that all testator's debts shall first be paid may be evidence that a particular debt previously contracted in favour of a child is not intended to be paid out of that child's share of the residue. But when the question is as to the effect of a subsequent covenant to pay money for the benefit of a child there is neither principle nor authority for the proposition that this effect can depend upon or be influenced by the presence or absence in a prior will of any more general provision for the payment of testator's debts (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—*COOPER v. (2) This presumption may be repelled or fortified by intrinsic evidence from the nature of the two provisions, or by extrinsic evidence of the intention of testator at the time of making his will.

(3) Slight differences between the two provisions will not repel the presumption against double provisions.

(4) Slight differences are such as, in the opinion of the judge, leave the two provisions substantially of the same nature.

(5) Declarations of the parent referring to his intention at the time of making his will, whether made at the time or before or after, are admissible evidence to prove that he did not mean to give a double provision.

(6) A paper written some time after the date of his will, & showing the state of his property, but having no reference to his intention, is not admissible for that purpose.

(7) A father, by articles made previous to the marriage of his daughter, agreed to settle, either by deed or will, lands of the value of £3,000, in trust for his daughter for life, to her separate use, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the children of the marriage as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders. By this will he devised a real estate, worth more than £3,000, in trust for his daughter for life to her separate use, but without the power of anticipation or alienation; remainder to the husband for life, he maintaining & educating the children of the marriage; remainder to the children of the marriage as tenants in common in fee; with a limitation over of the shares of those who should die under 25 without leaving issue to the survivors.—Held: the differences between the two provisions were not such as to repel the presumption against double portions, & the daughter, her husband & children were not entitled both to the benefits given by the will & to the provisions stipulated for by the articles.—*WEALL v. By his will, the father directed that for five years from his death there should be paid to his daughter-in-law an annuity of £2,000 for the maintenance of her husband, herself, & the support & education of her children, & at the end of the five years that there should be paid to his son's wife & children the sum of £10,000, upon the trusts & for the purposes of the settlement made on his son's marriage:—Held: the annuity of £2,000 during the five years was in substitution for & in satisfaction of the interest of the £10,000 during that period, & the daughter-in-law was not entitled to both the annuity of £2,000 & interest on the £10,000, but the annuity of £2,000 must abate to the extent of the interest on the £10,000 to which she was entitled under the settlement.—*BETHEL v. Upon the marriage of his son, B., in 1849, with C., A., by agreement of even date with the marriage settlement, agreed to pay the trustees of the settlement the yearly sum of £350 during the life of B., & in case C. should survive B., then to continue such yearly payment to the trustees of the settlement for the purposes thereof. In 1865 A., in pursuance of a family arrangement, transferred to his children, including B., property in which he was jointly interested with them: B.'s gain under this arrangement being considerably more than the value of a perpetual annuity of £350 a year. On the death of A. in 1865, the allowance to B. had been unpaid since 1859:—Held: the gift by will to B. of a share in A.'s residuary estate was adeemed pro tanto by the provision of £350 per annum made for him in the agreement of June, 1849, but B. was entitled to payment, as a creditor of the estate, of the arrears of such allowance accrued due in A.'s lifetime.

A., a married woman having property so settled on her, covenanted during the coverture, but without reference to herself as a married woman, to cause £1,000 to be paid after her death to the trustees of her daughter's marriage settlement. The trusts were for the daughter for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage in the usual form. This covenant did not refer to the power or the property comprised in the original settlement. Afterward by her will made in execution of the power during the coverture, A. bequeathed £1,000 on trust for the daughter for life, for her separate use, with remainder on certain trusts for her children slightly different from those declared under the covenant. 2009. —.]—By a marriage settlement of 1898 a sum of £10,000, which included a sum of £5,539 secured to the trustees by the covenant of the wife's father, was settled on certain trusts for the wife, husband & children, the wife taking the first life interest, & covenanting to settle after acquired property to which she became entitled during the coverture on substantially the same trusts. By his will of 1905 the father gave one-third of his residuary real & personal estate to the wife for her separate use absolutely. The father died during the coverture. His clear residuary estate subject only to the covenant was £80,000 all personalty:—Held: the bequest was a satisfaction as to the wife's life interest in the £5,539 secured by the covenant but not as to the interest of other cestuis que trust not mentioned in the will taking no direct interest in the bequest & only in fact taking derivatively under the after acquired property clause, because the bequest happened to take effect during the coverture. (a) Settlement precedes Will.

2010. Will substantially fulfilling obligation of settlement.—By marriage settlement, part of wife's fortune was advanced to husband for the purposes of his trade, for which he secured her an annuity, the rest being settled upon the children, after the decease of husband & wife, in such proportions as the wife should direct. By will he directed the wife should relinquish her claim under the settlement, & left a larger sum to trustees, the interest to be paid to her while sole, with a power to her to dispose of the whole among the children:—Held: this was a satisfaction for their portions under the settlement.—MOULSON v. MOULSON (1780), 1 Bro. C. C. 82; 28 E. R. 999.

2011. —.]—Testator, upon the marriage of a daughter, entered into a bond for the payment of £5,000 within six months after his decease to the trustees of his daughter's settlement, the interest to be paid to the husband for life; & after his decease, if the wife survived him & there were children of the marriage, £1,000, part of the £5,000, to be paid to the wife, & the remainder to be applied for the use of the children of the marriage; but if there were no children, £2,000 to be paid to the wife, & the remainder of the £5,000 to be paid to the exors. & administrators of the husband; & in case the husband survived the wife, & there were no children, then the whole of the £5,000 to the husband. Testator afterwards made his will & gave his daughter £5,000, stating it to be in addition to what he had secured upon her marriage. About five years afterwards testator executed a deed whereby he covenanted that his exors. should pay to the trustees, within six months after his death, the sum of £5,000 upon the trusts of the settlement. Parol evidence of the declarations of testator was admitted to prove that he did not intend a double portion.

Qu.: whether the different interests of the husband, wife, & children in the legacy of £5,000, & in the sum of £5,000 given by the deed, would repel the common presumption against double portions?—LLOYD v. HARVEY (1832), 2 Russ. & M. 310; 39 E. R. 412.

Annotation:—Reid. Powys v. Mansfield* (1836), 6 Sim. 528.

2012. — Beneficiary must elect.—A father having, upon the marriage of his daughter, agreed to give her a portion of £100,000, transferred one-third part thereof in stock to the four trustees of the marriage settlement, & gave them his bond for transfer of the remainder in like stock upon his death, the latter stock to be held by them on trust for the daughter's separate use for life, & after her death for the children of the marriage, as the husband & she should jointly appoint. The father afterwards by his will gave to two of the trustees a moiety of the residue of his personal estate, in trust for the daughter's separate use for life, remainder for her children generally as she should by deed or will appoint:—Held: the moiety of the residue given by the will was in satisfaction of the sum of stock secured by the bond, notwithstanding the differences of the trusts; & it being found to be for the benefit of the daughter & her children, if any she should have, to take under the will, she was bound to elect so to take.

Before I consider the authorities as applicable to the facts of this case, I think it expedient to throw out of consideration all the cases which have been cited, in which questions have arisen as to legacies being or not being held to be in satisfaction of debt; for, however similar the two cases may at first sight appear to be, the rules of Equity as applicable to each are absolutely opposed, the one to the other. Equity leans against legacies being taken in satisfaction of debt, but leans in favour of a provision by will being in satisfaction of a portion by contract, feeling the great improbability of a parent intending a double portion for one child, to the prejudice generally, as in the present case, of other children. In the case of debt, therefore, small circumstances of difference between the debt & the legacy are held to negative any presumption of satisfaction; whereas in the case of portions, small circumstances are disregarded. So in the case of debt, a smaller legacy is not held to be in satisfaction of part of a larger debt; but in the case of portions it may be satisfaction pro tanto. It has been decided that in the case of a debt, a gift of the whole or part of the residue cannot be considered as satisfaction, because it is said that, the amount being uncertain, it may prove to be less than the debt.

In considering whether this rule applies to portions, which is the only question in this case, the reason of the rule as applicable to debts must not be lost sight of; because as a portion may be satisfied pro tanto by a small legacy, the reason given for the rule as applicable to debts cannot apply as to portions. And, on the contrary, as the residue must be supposed to have been considered by testator as of some value, it would appear upon principle that it ought to be considered as satisfaction altogether, or pro tanto according to the amount. For why should £1,000, given as residue, not have the same effect upon a larger portion as £1,000, given as a money legacy? (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—THYNNE (LADY) v. GLENGALL (EARL) (1848), 2 H. L. The deed contained a covenant for the settlement of any property which should be so given on specified trusts. By his will, made in 1864, A., after giving an annuity & directing payment of his debts out of his personal estate, directed the trustees to stand possessed of one moiety of the proceeds of his real & residuary personal estate upon trust for B., for her separate use for life, with remainder to her husband until bkpcy. or alienation, & remainder to her children as she should by deed or will appoint, & in default of appointment, to her children equally as tenants in common, with limitations over on the trusts of the other moiety which were in favour of A.'s other daughter C. & her children. The limitations in the settlement of 1851 were not identical with those of the will; in particular, the husband took the first life interest, which was not made determinable upon bkpcy. or alienation, & the limitations to children were confined to the children of the marriage, & were subject to a joint power of appointment in husband & wife:—Held: (1) the legal presumption that the covenant had been satisfied by the gift in the will was not rebutted by the difference of the limitations in the two instruments, having regard to the identity of the subject-matter; (2) B. & the other persons interested must elect between the provisions covenanted to be made by the settlement & given by the will.—RUSSELL v. 2016 I. Limitation in will substantially different.]—G., by a voluntary deed, declared that he, his exors. or administrators, or such other person or persons as he should by deed or will appoint trustee or trustees of the deed, should stand & be possessed of a sum of £6,958 10s. 1d., secured by mtge. on the D. estate upon trust to receive the annual interest & income, & pay the net income to her sister E. for life or spinsterhood, with other limitations in the case of her death or marriage. The mtge. was a well-secured first mtge., & the deed contained wide power of investment. G. received the interest & regularly paid it over to his sister. By a subsequent will he appointed trustees & exors. & gave them all his real & personal property upon trust to pay to his sister E. the interest on £6,500 for life or until she should marry. The powers of investment were restricted, & the subsequent limitations were different from those of being a son or sons, should attain 21, or being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry, & if more than one in equal shares, & in default of children for the husband absolutely. In 1871 T. satisfied this covenant to the extent of one moiety. In 1873 he made his will, bequeathing £2,800 to trustees in trust for the daughter for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, & after her decease for such of her children as should attain twenty-one in equal shares:—Held: there were such substantial differences between the provisions made by the settlement & by the will as to rebut the presumption against double portions.

(2) Parol evidence of the intention of the parties is admissible to rebut the presumption against double portions, & there is no difference in this respect between the cases of a deed & a will.

(3) Ademption is easier to presume than satisfaction.

In a case of ademption, where the will is first, that is a revocable instrument & testator has an absolute power of revoking or altering any gift thereby made. But where the obligation is earlier in date than the will testator is under a liability which he cannot revoke or avoid. . . . It is therefore easier to assume an intention to give a legacy in lieu or in satisfaction of an existing obligation (COTTON, L.J.).—Re TUSSAUD'S ESTATE, TUSSAUD v. TUSSAUD (1878), 9 Ch. 2017. —[V. on the marriage of his daughter covenanted with the trustees of her settlement that his heirs, exors., & administrators would, within twelve calendar months after his decease or that of his wife, pay to them a share, which ultimately became one-sixth, ascertained by the number of his children, of his real & personal estate upon trusts for his daughter for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, then to her husband H. for life, & subject to a joint power of appointment among their issue, & in default of such appointment as the survivor should appoint, to the children of the marriage at 21 or marriage. The settlement contained an agreement & declaration that any share passing to the daughter under her father's will should, if she elected to claim under the will, be a satisfaction of the covenant. The father subsequently made a will, whereby he confirmed the covenant in the settlement, & after a trust for payment of his debts directed his trustees to stand possessed of an equal share of his residuary estate upon trust for his daughter for life, & then for her children at 21 or marriage, in default of children for any husband of his daughter for life & subject thereto such share to fall into residue. The daughter having elected against the will, the question arose whether her husband & children could claim under the will & as to their rights having regard to the provisions of the settlement & will:—Held: (1) the liability under the covenant in the settlement was not a debt within the meaning of Chichester (Lord) v. Coventry, No. 1744, ante, to be deducted before ascertaining testator's residue; (2) on the construction of the agreement & declaration in the settlement there was no satisfaction of the covenant; (3) having regard to the recital by testator of his covenant in his daughter's marriage settlement & its confirmation by his will, & to the substantial distinctions between the limitations in the settlement & will, an intention was manifested that the covenant should not be abrogated by the will & testator intended to perform it, & there was no satisfaction as regards any of the parties claiming under the settlement, the children of the daughter not being put to their election.—Re VERNON, GARLAND v. SHAW (1906), 95 L. T. 48.

2018. Devise subject to incumbrances.—A father on the marriage of his second son, by deed of settlement covenanted to pay him an annuity of £1,000 a year for life, & to charge the annuity on a sufficient part of the real estate he might die seised of; provided that nothing in the settlement should prevent his dealing with his real estate during his life, or, so only that sufficient real estate were left charged with the annuity, by will. The father subsequently made his will by which he devised his real estate, subject to the charges & incumbrances thereon, in strict settlement on his first & other sons in tail male; he bequeathed the greater part of his personal estate among his children, giving his second son legacies the income of which when invested would be considerably more than £1,000 a year. He died leaving three sons:—Held: (1) the settlement operated not only as a covenant by the father, but also as a charge upon all the real estate of which he should die seised; (2) the words "subject to the charges & incumbrances thereon," were too general to rebut the presumption against double portions, & the second son was not entitled both to the annuity & to the bequests under the will.

The same presumption arises in another form when the father by his will gives a benefit to a son & afterwards on his marriage or upon some other event makes a settlement upon him: there again the later provision is considered as an ademption of the previous gift by will, unless it can be seen either by parol testimony as to the intention of the father or by something appearing upon the document, that the son is intended to have both (COTTON, L.J.).—MONTAGU v. SANDWICH (EARL) (1886), 32 Ch. D. 525; 55 L. J. Ch. 925; 54 L. T. 502; 2 T. L. R. 392, C. A.

2019. Immaterial differences will not rebut presumption.—Testator bequeathed £10,000 to trustees, in trust to pay the interest to his daughter for life, provided that, when she married, one moiety of the £10,000 should be paid to her or her husband, & that the other moiety should be held in trust to pay the interest, to his daughter for life, & after her decease, in trust for her children, & if she had no children, then to sink the deed. It was provided by the will that if testator's securities & investments should so depreciate that they were unable to pay to his sister E. £180 a year, she was only to receive £100 a year, the balance of the income of the £6,500 to be accumulated for the benefit of his sons. By a codicil he increased the gift to his sister E. by £400:—Held: assuming testator had placed himself in loco parentis to his sister E., & that there was a prosumption of satisfaction, the presumption was rebutted by the differences in point of certainty & value between the obligations of the trust deed & the gift in the will.—Re GLEESON, SMYTH v. GLEESON, [1911] 1 I. R. 113.—IR.

into the residue of his personal estate, which he gave to his two sons. The daughter married during testator's lifetime, & testator settled £10,000 in trust for his daughter for life, for her separate use, & after her decease, in trust for her husband for life, & after the decease of the survivor, in trust for the children of the marriage as the husband & wife should jointly appoint; & in default of such joint appointment, then as the survivor should appoint; & in default of any appointment, then in trust for the issue of the marriage; & on failure of such issue, then in trust for the issue of testator living at the death of the survivor of the husband & wife:—Held: the provision made by the settlement was a satisfaction of the legacy.—*PLATT v. J. bequeathed £10,000 in trust for his daughter for life, & after her death, in trust for her children, & declared that that sum should be in addition to the sum to which she was entitled under L.'s will. The daughter afterwards married. Her father advanced to her husband £15,000 as her marriage portion, & by the settlement, pin-money & a jointure for the wife, & portions for the younger children of the marriage, were provided out of the husband's property, & the £15,000 were declared to be in satisfaction of the sums to which the wife was entitled under L.'s will. The father died in 1794; no demand was made for the £10,000 until 1826:—Held: the £10,000 legacy was satisfied by the marriage portion, assuming, as one ground of their judgment, that the daughter was apprised of the contents of her father's will soon after his death.—*DURHAM (EARL) v. 2028. —.—.]—A merchant, a native of Canada, who carried on his business at Montreal, in 1858 retired from business, sold his residence, & also a plot of ground which he had bought for a grave, & went with his wife & two children to reside in France, for the purpose of educating the children. He resided in France till 1868. In 1867 his wife died there. Early in 1868 he went with his two children to England, & in March of that year he purchased a leasehold house at St. John's Wood. He furnished the house & continued to live there until his death, in May, 1871. In 1863, 1865, & 1870 he paid visits to Canada, on business principally relating to the management of the estate of his father, a Canadian, of whose will he & two of his brothers were the executors. When in Montreal, in 1863, he executed a will in the French language, & in the form usual in Lower Canada, in which he described himself as then residing at Montreal. By this will he in effect, in the events which happened, gave the residue of his property equally between his children on their attaining twenty-one. He also, during this visit to Canada, obtained there a certificate of domicile. In 1865 testator, when he was in Montreal, executed a codicil to his will, also in the French language, & in a similar form to the will. The codicil did not affect the gift of the residue. In 1869 testator's daughter was married in England to an Englishman. A settlement was made on her marriage in the usual English form. The trustees were Englishmen resident in England. By the settlement testator covenanted with the trustees that he would during his life, or within six months after his death, pay to them £8,500, to be held on trust for the daughter for her life, for her separate use, with remainder to the issue of the marriage. In 1869 testator apprenticed his son to a merchant in London, to whom he paid a premium of £400. He also agreed to purchase for the son a share in the same merchant's business, & paid for this purpose £1,100, and he made some other advances for the son. When he was in Canada in 1870 he told his brothers, who resided there, that he intended to return there permanently in a few months. He expressed this same intention to his son, but never mentioned it to his daughter. The testator died in England in May, 1871. He had only two children, a son & a daughter, both of whom had attained 21 before his death. When he died, no part of the £8,500 had been paid to the trustees of the daughter's settlement. The testator left no real estate in England, Canada, or elsewhere. His personal estate comprised Canadian & various foreign securities. There was some evidence to show that the loss of his Canadian domicile would have disqualified testator, according to the law of —(1) By a marriage settlement in 1864 the settlor covenanted with the trustees for the payment to them in his lifetime, or within six months after his decease, of a sum of £2,000, to be held in trust for the wife for life, & after her death for the settlor for life, & after the decease of the survivor for the children of the marriage & of a former marriage as the husband & wife should jointly appoint, & in default of appointment for the children of both marriages, sons at twenty-one & daughters at twenty-one or marriage. In Jan. 1878, the settlor effected two policies on his own life, each for £1,000, under Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), s. 10, each policy being expressed to be "for the benefit of his wife & children." At his death in 1902 the covenant remained unperformed :—Held: having regard to the difference between the provisions under the settlement & under the policies, it was impossible to hold that the settlor when he effected the policies, intended that the policy moneys should be taken in substitution for the benefits under the settlement, & therefore the provision which the settlor made by the policies was not by way of satisfaction of the covenant.

(2) To ascertain the intention as to satisfaction the position at the time the transaction said to be a satisfaction took place must be looked at, & not merely the actual result.—*CARTWRIGHT v. SECT. 4.—SATISFACTION OF DEBT BY LEGACY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—INTENTION OF TESTATOR DECLARED.

2033. General rule.—Long ago a false principle was established, viz., that if a man owes a debt, & then gives a legacy to his creditor, the legacy is a satisfaction of the debt; that the creditor cannot legally have both the debt & the legacy. That principle being established, successive judges have said they cannot alter it. But what they have done is to rely on the minutest shade of difference to escape from that false principle.

It would be more satisfactory to be able to decide that, primâ facie, unless a testator shows a contrary intention, he should be held, if he owes a debt & gives a legacy, to mean that he or his estate should pay the debt & also the legacy. If you find that testator, in his will, expresses an intention that what he gives is to satisfy the debt, then it is not a question of satisfaction but of election. But in the absence of such expressed intention, when a man owes a debt, all that he has to give is what remains after payment of his debt. It is only the residue, after paying the debt, that is his to give; so that, if he gives a legacy, he must be held to mean that his creditors should be first paid, & then it will be seen what remains, & out of that he gives a legacy.

In this case there is every reason why the general rule should not prevail; there are a number of circumstances which, following the example of preceding judges, I shall hold take this case out of the rule. In cases of this kind, wherever I find any discrepancy between the debt & the thing given, I will follow the doctrine laid down by the authorities, & say that is a reason for departing from the general false principle.

Now it appears to me that in this case there is every one of the circumstances that have been relied upon in the cases. And, in particular, there is an express direction to pay the debts & then a direction to pay the legacies. How can that direction be followed out without paying the debts as well as the legacies? To do otherwise would be contrary to the very terms of the will itself. I think, therefore, there is quite sufficient to say pltf. is entitled (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—HASSELL v. HAWKINS (1859), 4 Drew. 468; 62 E. R. 180; sub nom. RUSSEL v. HANKINS, 7 W. R. 314.

2034. Intention in favour of satisfaction—Legates to elect.—C. had a sum of £15,000 given him at his age of 25 & an allowance of £250 per annum to that time. There was also a direction that if he should arrive at the age of 22 & then marry with the consent of the trustees the £15,000 should be settled upon him & his family. The manner of providing for the J.'s is by giving them the residue. But if that should be more than £15,000 then the surplus to be divided equally between the J.'s & C. Testator had before given a bond to trustees in favour of C., to secure £500 to be paid him at 21, with interest in the meantime at the rate of four per cent. In order to show that the bond is not to be paid it is necessary to prove to the ct. such to have been the intention of testator; & that testator's bounty was narrowed exactly to that point. The idea that meant a strict equality between the J.'s & C. is not sufficiently made out; for C. is to be taken care of in all events. The provision for the J.'s is certainly secondary to C.'s. A strong circumstance to contradict the presumption that he meant to cancel the bond is that having given a bond to his housekeeper in consideration of her faithful services, he gave her by his will, a legacy which he thereby declared to be in satisfaction of the bond, she having made her election to take the legacy, which shows he knew perfectly well what he was about at the time. The cases of portions are not applicable to the present because there the interest of the eldest son or the representation of the family is affected in favour of the younger children or other branches of the family. This is no portion; it wants the necessary ingredient of a portion which is providing for the younger branches of the family at the expense of the eldest. But this is the bulk of the fortune. C. was entitled as heir (in the common usage of the word, without applying it particularly to real estate) together with the J.'s to the whole fortune; equally if it exceeded or amounted to £30,000; if less, he was better off than the J.'s which is a stronger case (LORD LOUGHBOROUGH).—*JEACOCK v. 2035. — Death before election made—Presumption by court.—Devise of residuary real estate in lieu & discharge of all debts due from testator to devisee. Devisee dies intestate three days after testator:—Held: as between the heir & personal representative of the devisee, it not being manifestly for the disadvantage of the devisee to retain the devised estate, the ct. could not presume a disclaimer by her—consequently her heir was entitled to the estate, & debts claimed by her administrator as due to her from testator were discharged. Semble: had it been manifestly for the disadvantage of the devisee to retain the estate upon the terms proposed by testator, the ct. might have presumed a disclaimer.—HARRIS v. WATKINS (1856), 2 K. & J. 473; 69 E. R. 869.

2036. — — — — ——Under a covenant for value to settle land the equitable interest of the covenantor before conveyance is commensurate only with that which a Ct. of Equity would decree in granting specific performance.

In 1900 a half-interest in freehold premises in T. was conveyed to the owner of the other half-interest by his niece, in consideration of a promise in writing that she should be paid half the net rental during her life, & that after her death a half-interest in the property should be conveyed to her heirs, & that the grantee should so provide by his will. Half the net rental was paid to the niece down to the death of the grantee in 1912. By his will made in 1911 the property in question fell into the residue & testator bequeathed to his niece thereout a legacy of 20,000 dollars. The evidence showed that this legacy was bequeathed, as the legatee knew, upon the footing that she had relinquished, or would relinquish, any claim upon the property under the agreement of 1900:—Held: testator was not a trustee of a half-interest in the property for his niece, & she was put to her election between enforcing her claim to a half-interest therein or taking the legacy.—*CENTRAL TRUST & SAFE DEPOSIT CO. v. 2039. Agreement to settle land—Satisfaction by subsequent devise.—A bond was given by the father of an illegitimate child to her intended husband, in contemplation of their intended marriage, in the penal sum of £2,000 conditioned to pay the husband £1,000 & interest. It was recited in the condition, that in consideration of the intended marriage, the obligor had proposed to the obligee to surrender certain copyhold property, then let on lease at a rent of £50 per annum, to the uses thereafter mentioned; & if such surrender should not be so made within eighteen months after the marriage, the husband & wife, or the survivor, should receive, after the death of the obligor, £1,000; & he was, in the meantime, to pay the husband & wife £50 a year for the interest thereof, until the principal sum should be fully discharged. The condition was to the effect of the recital; & that, if the estate should be so settled in substance to the use of the husband & wife for life, remainder to the survivor, remainder to their issue; & if the £1,000 & interest should be paid, or if the obligor should make such surrender in his lifetime, & pay the arrears of interest up to the time of the surrender, the obligation to be void. The obligor died without making the surrender, having regularly paid the £50 per annum; & by his will he devised the copyhold estate to his daughter, the wife of the obligee:—Held: (1) the bond was not forfeited by reason of the breach of the condition; (2) it was merely an agreement to settle the land, & as such satisfied by the devise, although absolute

Sometime afterwards he made his will, bequeathing to her a much larger sum, & directing his exor., who was also his residuary legatee, to pay all his just debts: Held: (1) the concurrence of the wife in the receipt of the legacy by the husband was not a gift of it to him; (2) the bequest by the husband to the wife was not a satisfaction of the wife's claim against his estate in respect of the first-mentioned legacy.

"The first inference from the evidence, I think, is that pltf. did not intend to allow her husband to receive the £600 which belonged to her for her separate use with the intention of giving him that money or relinquishing to him her right to it. I think the proper conclusion is that at the time of his death he was in equity indebted to her in this sum. Then comes the question whether the legacy is to be taken as a satisfaction of the debt. With reference to that point it is well to observe that the testator, the husband, thus expresses himself, "I also appoint my nephew to be my sole executor to pay all my just debts, funeral expenses, costs of proving this my will, taking to himself all the remainder & residue of the said property of whatsoever kind & whensoever." The authorities do not I think render it right for me to disregard these expressions on a question of intention (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—Rowe v. Rowe (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 294; 17 L. J. By his will, dated Jan. 20, 1894, the husband devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to his exors. & trustees upon trust for sale & conversion, & directed them thereout to pay (inter alia) his debts & legacies & to invest his "clear residuary estate" & hold the same in trust to pay the income to his wife for life, & after her decease, in the events that happened, in trust for a certain remainderman. The husband died on Nov. 30, 1894, without issue. The wife thenceforth received the residuary income, which, together with the settlement income, had always amounted to over £1,000 a year less income tax:—Held: (1) the covenant had hitherto in fact been performed by the bequest. (2) The direction to pay debts did not include the prospective liability under the covenant. (3) The husband intended the bequest in satisfaction of that liability.—*Re HALL, HOPE v. On marriage the husband covenanted that if the wife should survive him & there should be no issue, his exors. should within nine months after his death, pay to the wife £800 for her own use, but if there should be issue, then the £800 should be laid out by the trustees & the interest paid to the wife for life, & after her death the principal divided amongst the children. There was no issue of the marriage. The trustee being desirous of retiring, by an arrangement made with the consent of all parties, the stock was transferred & the money paid over to the husband as trustee for his wife, & the husband further agreed to pay the wife a yearly sum by way of interest for the use of the whole. The husband afterwards by will bequeathed to his wife a legacy considerably larger than the whole of her separate property in his hands.—Held: the legacy was not in satisfaction of the debt, & the husband held the property as trustee for his wife.—TAYLOR v. but did not invest it; but the maintenance & education of P., who resided with him, were paid for by him; & by his will he bequeathed £2,200 to P. or for his benefit. C. died in 1829 & his exors. thereupon invested £100, which had accumulated to the amount now claimed, to meet the payment of the legacy of that amount, if claimed. P. died in 1859. On the question, whether the £2,200 was in satisfaction of the legacy or not:—Held: the legal personal representative of P. was entitled to the accumulated fund.—Re CLARE'S TRUSTS (1861), 4 L. He did not pay them in his lifetime; but amongst other legacies which by his will he directed his exors. to pay was a sum of £500 to J., & a sum of £100 to M., not limited to her separate use:—Held: (1) the sum of £100 given to J., by the appointment of the wife, was satisfied by the £500 bequeathed by testator; (2) the sum of £100 bequeathed to M. was in addition to, & not a satisfaction of, the £100 given to her separate use by the wife.—*FOURDRIN v. for R., the intended husband for life, & after the death of the survivor of R. & H., in trust for the children of the marriage, as R. & H. or the survivor should appoint, & in default of appointment for the children equally. The children allowed R. to obtain possession of the trust fund, which he mixed with moneys of his own, & in were vested in trustees upon trust for the wife for life, for her separate use, & after her death for the husband for life, & after the death of the survivor, in default of appointment, for the children of the marriage in equal shares. There was issue of the marriage two sons only, each of whom attained his majority & married. The father obtained sole control of the trust funds, & appropriated them to his own use, but at the same time made handsome settlements on the two sons upon their respective marriages, & also various other gifts & advances to them out of his own property. The marriage settlement of one of the sons included a sum of stock which was an investment of part of the proceeds of the misappropriated trust funds. The various gifts & advances to the sons did not, in respect either of quantity of interest or amount, correspond with the shares to which they became entitled in the trust funds. The mother & sons all predeceased the father, who subsequently died:—Held: the facts & correspondence rebutted any presumption that the father made the settlements & advances in satisfaction of any part of the trust funds, & his estate was liable to make good to the representatives of the two sons their shares in the trust funds misappropriated by him without accounting for the properties settled upon, or given or advanced to, the sons by the father, including the sum of stock included in the son's marriage settlement, which was an investment of part of the proceeds of the misappropriated trust funds.—*CRICHTON v. By a marriage settlement, a rentcharge of £200 a year was secured to the wife for life, payable quarterly, with powers of distress, etc. To enable the husband to mortgage, the wife released her rent charge to the mtgee. The equity of redemption was reserved to the husband, who covenanted to convey other lands on the trusts of the settlement. The husband, by his will, gave his real & personal estate to his brother, on condition that he would allow his wife £300 a year for life:—Held: (1) the £200 a year remained a valid charge on the equity of redemption; (2) it was not satisfied by the £300 a year.—*WOOD v. A person may stand in loco parentis to a child, although the child lives with & is maintained by its father.

(2) Parol evidence is admissible to prove that a person did mean to put himself in loco parentis towards a child, so far as relates to the child's future provision; & evidence of the declarations, as well as the acts of such person, are admissible for that purpose.

The father never mentioned the subject again, nor was interest asked for on the £200. In filling in the counterfoil to the cheque in his cheque-book, testator wrote the word "loan." Testator by his will anterior to the date of the cheque directed that any sums that his children should owe him in respect of loans should be set off against certain settled legacies or shares of residue, &, the trustees under his will having treated the £200 as a sum to be set off against appct.'s legacy & deducted interest upon it, he asked for a declaration that he was entitled to payment without any deduction. ## Part XII.—Performance.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

W. on his son's marriage settled £5,000 old & new annuities on himself for life, then on W.'s wife for life, remainder to his son for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage. Not only so much as his estate for life, in these annuities is valued at, but the whole £5,000 must be brought into hotchpot before the son can be admitted to a share of W.'s personal estate who died intestate.—WEYLAND v. WEYLAND (1742), 2 Atk. 632; 26 E. R. 777.

Where a man covenants to do an act, & he does an act which may be converted to a completion of this covenant it shall be supposed that he meant to complete it (KENYON, M.R.).—SOWDEN v. SOWDEN (1785), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 165; 1 Bro. C. O. 582; 29 E. R. 1111.

accordingly, leaving them to descend upon his heir-at-law, who was also the first tenant in tail in remainder under the settlement, a ct. of equity will intend that the purchase was made in performance of the obligation imposed by the Act, & will not permit the remainder-man to recover the value of the lands sold against the personal estate of the tenant for life.

The whole doctrine proceeds upon the ground that a person is to be presumed to do that which he is bound to do; & if he has done any thing, that he has done it in pursuance of his obligation (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).—TUBBS v. BROADWOOD (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 487; 39 E. R. 479.

A. did not make the purchase within the time, or make any investment, he afterwards laid out £1,650, in the purchase of a house, but made no conveyance to the trustees, though the purchase was considered by the parties to have been made in performance of the covenant. A. subsequently mortgaged the house & other real estate, to secure £1,800 & shortly afterwards became bkpt., & a portion of the money raised by the mtge. being in the hands of bkpt.'s solr. was paid over to the assignees:—Held: the £1,000 formed a lien on the estate so purchased by the bkpt. which purchase was to be treated pro tanto as in performance of the covenant, & such portion of the money raised on the estate purchased as came into the hands of the assignees should be applied in part discharge of the lien.

According to the well established principles of the ct. established for many years, there is a right on the part of those who are interested under the settlement, to treat this estate as a purchase pro tanto, with the view of performing the covenant, as against bkpt., & all claiming under him, though not as against a purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.)—*Re SYMES, Ex p. 2264. Covenant to discharge mortgage on settled property.—By specific funds.—Funds applied in purchase of reversions.—Performance.]—A voluntary settlement of various properties numbered consecutively contained a covenant by settlor to apply specific funds in the discharge of a mtge. on the property numbered 8 to the intent that property 8 might be held on the trusts of the settlement free of the mtge. The trusts of the settlement were for such persons & for such purposes & generally in such manner as settlor should from time to time during his lifetime in writing direct, & subject thereto upon trust for certain beneficiaries after his death. The settlement contained the usual power of revocation by deed. Instead of paying off the mtge. on property 8 the settlor applied the specific funds in purchasing three reversions which he subsequently arranged with the trustees' solr. to put into settlement in satisfaction of his covenant. By a letter of directions drafted by the trustees' solr. & subsequently confirmed by deed poll settlor directed the trustees to hold property 8 subject to the mtge., in lieu of the same being paid off by him, & subject to that mtge. he directed them to hold the said premises upon the trusts of the settlement, & he thereby undertook to assign the three reversions to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. This undertaking was accepted by the trustees' solr. on behalf of the trustees in satisfaction of the covenant.

Settlor died five months later without having assigned the second & third reversions, but his exors., not realising that there could be any possible doubt as to the effective operation of the letter of directions, treated them as belonging to the trustees, who paid the policy premiums on both reversions, & in the case of the third reversion paid off a mtge. & took a reconveyance from the mtgee. Nine years after settlor's death the exors. claimed the second & third reversions on the ground that settlor's undertaking to assign them was only an imperfect voluntary gift. They offered to redeem any mtge. that the trustees had paid off. The trustees thereupon brought this action for a declaration that the two reversions belonged to them:—Held: settlor had shown no intention of revoking his voluntary covenant, but merely intended to satisfy his liability thereunder by undertaking to assign the three reversions, & the acceptance by the trustees' solr. of that undertaking in satisfaction of the voluntary covenant was sufficient consideration to support the letter of directions & the undertaking therein contained.

Semle: even if the undertaking had been purely voluntary, & as such an imperfect gift, the trustees could have held their legal interest in the third reversion against the exors.—CARTER v. HUNGERFORD, [1917] 1 Ch. 260; 86 L. J. Ch. 162; 115 L. T. 857.

A father, in contemplation of the marriage of his son, proposed in writing, to settle an estate in a specified parish, worth £200 a year, free from incumbrances, on himself, for life, with successive remainders to his son & his intended wife, & the children, charged with £50 a year to his own widow, for life. By a settlement, not referring to the proposal, the father conveyed an estate, held in fee, worth £57 a year, & an estate of which he was tenant for life, with limitation to his son in tail, of the yearly value of £190, both in the specified parish, to the proposed uses, & absolutely covenanted that the conveyed hereditaments were of the annual value of £200, & that he was absolutely seised in fee of them. The marriage took effect, & both the son & his wife died, leaving an infant daughter; the son had married a second time, & left a son, who became tenant in tail of the hereditaments worth £190 a year. In a suit by the infant daughter & the trustee of her settlement, against the representatives of her grandfather, settlor, for damages for the breach of his covenant:—Held: the proposals could not be looked to as defining the value of the property to be settled; & plffs. were entitled to damages to the full extent of the value of the settled land, though that would create a total income under the settlement of £247 instead of only £200.—*WACE v. Testatrix, bequeathed a sum of £5,000 upon trusts for her nephew for life, & then for his wife for life. She then gave to her nephew a power of appointment by will over the £5,000 amongst his children; & in default of appointment, or subject to any such as should not be a complete & entire disposition of the whole sum, she gave the same to all her nephew's children absolutely, to become vested at 21 or marriage. The nephew had five children, one of whom, a son, after attaining 21, died unmarried & intestate. Afterwards a daughter, who had also attained 21 married, & on this occasion the father covenanted that he would, in exercise of the power, appoint by will to the trustees of her settlement one-fifth of the £5,000. The daughter also assigned to the trustees all that her fifth part or share in default of any testamentary appointment of & in the sum of £5,000. The father died without having exercised the power in any way. Upon the death of the widow, the trustees of the settlement claimed not only the sum of £1,000, but also one-fifth of the remaining £4,000, as being a part of the fund which was not completely & entirely disposed of by the covenant of the appointor:—Held: the covenant, though not actually performed, had been substantially satisfied; & plffs. were entitled to no more than £1,000.

2306. ———. ]—(1) A. the owner in fee of an estate in fee simple, in 1802, charged the estate with two judgment debts in favour of B. & M. respectively. In 1809 A. made a voluntary settlement of the estate, reciting the above charges. Afterwards A. in 1818 & 1819 mortgaged the estate to H. & N. by separate mtges. In 1822 another judgment debt was recovered against A. the title to which vested in applt.:—Held: applt.'s judgment debt affected only the interest that A. had in the estate, i.e. the residue of the life estate after satisfaction of the incumbrances; the judgment creditor standing in the position of an assignee of A.'s life interest.

The doctrine of marshalling amounts to this, that where one person has a clear right to resort to two funds, & another person has a right to resort to one only of the two funds, the latter may say that, as between himself & the double creditor, the double creditor shall be put to exhaust the security upon which the single creditor has no claim; but the doctrine does not apply where, as here, the single creditor is himself bound to the party entitled to the other security.

survivors; which may discharge the assets, & the equitable arrangement, confining creditors to one of two funds, being admitted only in favour of creditors of the same debtor, except upon some special equity, as in the case of drawer & acceptor, or principal & surety.

(2) If A. has a right to go upon two funds & B. upon one, having both the same debtor, A. shall take payment from that fund to which he can resort exclusively that by those means of distribution both may be paid. That course takes place where both are creditors of the same person & have demands against funds, the property of the same person, but it was never said that if I have a demand against A. & B., a creditor of B. shall compel me to go against A. without more as if B. himself could insist that A. ought to pay in the first instance (LORD ELDON, C.).—*Ex p. SECT. 3.—BOTH FUNDS MUST BE IN EXISTENCE WHEN CLAIM ARISES.

2310. Effect of winding-up of insurance company.]—By the deed of settlement of an insurance co., & by the terms of the policies issued by the co., it was provided that the capital stock & funds of the co. should alone be liable to claims in respect of the policies, & that no shareholder should be liable to such claims beyond the amount of the unpaid part of his share in the capital of the co. The co. was wound up, & calls to the full amount of the unpaid capital were made, & the proceeds of such calls, together with the other assets of the co., were applied in paying part of the costs of the winding-up, & in paying dividends on the debts due to policy holders & general creditors of the co., pari passu.—Held: the doctrine of marshalling did not apply.

If the question of marshalling could have arisen at all it must have arisen at the moment of what I may call the death of the co., but there were no funds to marshal at that time (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—Re PROFESSIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE CO. (1867), L. SECT. 4.—MUST NOT PREJUDICE THIRD PARTIES.

2311. General rule.]—A person having three estates which we will call A., B., & C. with mtges. upon all the three, executes a voluntary settlement of one of the estates, say of C., & afterwards creates a mtge. upon B. alone, I apprehend that he cannot, according to the doctrine laid down by LORD ELDON in Aldrich v. Cooper, No. 2801, ante, affect the interests created in third parties by this doctrine of marshalling, that is to say, he cannot throw the mtges. of A., B., & C. upon the estate conveyed away by voluntary settlement, in order that he may leave B. entirely clear & free from mtge. debt (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—DOLPHIN v. AYLWARD, No. 2306, ante.

2312. —.]—Defts. were auctioneers & had sold for a customer a brewery, & part of the proceeds of the sale was in their hands subject to their claim for charges incurred in connection with the sale; they had also in their hands the balance of the price of some furniture sold by them for the same customer. Pltf. was a creditor of defts.' customer, & he by letter charged the proceeds of the sale of the brewery in favour of pltf. Defts. wrote to pltf. acknowledging the receipt of the letter of charge. Defts. afterwards paid their customer the balance of the price of the furniture, & appropriated the part of the proceeds of the sale of the brewery in their hands to the payment of their charges.—Held: (1) the letter of charge & defts.' acknowledgment thereof amounted to a good equitable assignment in favour of pltf.; (2) defts. as auctioneers had a lien for their charges upon the part of the proceeds of the sale of the brewery in their hands; (3) defts. were at liberty to appropriate the part of the proceeds of the sale of the brewery in their hands to the payment of their charges, & were not bound to take payment of their charges out of the price of the furniture in order to enable pltf. to obtain payment of his charge, & the doctrine of marshalling did not apply. Here the two funds were in the hands of the same persons; over the one they had a right of lien, but not over the other. They stood in a different position with regard to the two funds. I cannot think that the doctrine of marshalling applies where there are different funds as to which different rights exist. As between the two parties the doctrine does not apply; it applies when the funds are in ct. & when the ct. can exercise a jurisdiction over them (BRETT, M.R.).

(4) Assets shall not be marshalled where by so doing another man's right would be prejudiced (LINDLEY, L.J.).—WEBB v. SMITH (1885), 30 Ch. D. 192; 55 L. J. Ch. 343; 53 L. T. 737; 1 T. L. R. 225, C. A.

2313. Mortgage of freeholds—Leaseholds assigned to pay mortgage debt & bonds—Settlement of freeholds on children—Insufficiency of leaseholds—Protection of children's interests.]—Husband & wife being lessees of a rectory, assigned it to trustees, in trust to sell & pay certain bonds of the husband & mtges. on his freehold estates, & by deed of even date the husband, in consideration of his wife having joined in the assignment, conveyed his freehold estates in trust for himself & his wife for their lives, & after their deaths, to be sold for benefit of their children. The produce of the rectory was not sufficient to pay, in full, both the bonds & mtges.—Held: the bond creditors had no right, as against the children, to throw the mtges. upon the produce of the freeholds.—BOAZMAN v. JOHNSTON (1830), 3 Sim. 377; 57 E. R. 1039.

NEWMAN* (1870), 39 L. J. Ch. 769.

2317. ——— Separate second mortgages—One second mortgage may not marshal against another.—Two properties, X. & Y., were mtgd. to A., & afterwards X. alone was mtgd. to B.:—Held: B. was entitled to have the securities marshalled, so as to throw A.'s mtg. in the first instance, on estate Y.

If two estates are mtgd. to A. & one is afterwards mtgd. to B. & the remaining estate is afterwards mtgd. to C., B. has no equity to throw the whole of A.'s mtg. on C.'s estate, & so destroy C.'s security (ROMILLY, M.R.).—*GIBSON v. He afterwards mtgd. the fourth estate, & took the benefit of Insolvent Debtors Act. After this, a creditor on certain bills of exchange became a registered judgment creditor, & then filed a bill against the tenant in tail & the assignee under the insolvency, & the other incumbrancers, praying a sale in satisfaction of the judgment debt & what might be paid by pltf. in discharge of prior incumbrances, subject to the estate & interest of the tenant in tail under the settlement:—Held: the settled estates must be regarded as exonerated from incumbrances as between A., settlor, & the tenant in tail, & pltf. was subject to the same equities as settlor; & as the judgment debt was itself subsequent to the settlement, the tenant in tail could not be affected by the judgment.—*HUGHES v. ## SECT. 5.—MUST NOT PREJUDICE PRIORITY OF SECURITIES.

2319. Right of prior incumbrancer to find security available.—P. purchased, in 1814, three roods 23 perches of land by the description of "about one acre," & in 1815, thirty perches of land immediately adjoining, all which he threw into one piece, & built a house. In 1819, he mtgd. inter alia, the whole of the premises to W. for £5,000, by a description sufficient to pass the whole, & delivered up the title deeds relating to the purchase of 1814. In 1820 he mtgd. inter alia, the whole of the premises to L. for £2,000, by the same description as in 1819, & delivered up to L. the title deeds of 1815. He acted on this occasion as L.'s solr. There was also a subsequent incumbrancer, H. In 1823 P. died, having devised all his property to trustees for sale. In 1829 the trustees for sale contracted to sell to G., who was at that time a yearly tenant. G. sent in requisitions on the title, paid about one-third of the purchase-money, & continued in unmolested enjoyment of the whole of the premises up to the time of the filing of this bill. W., L., & H. had all assented to the contract with G. On a bill by the persons beneficially interested in the first mtg. to have the contract carried out & the sales moneys applied:—Held: (1) they were entitled in priority to full satisfaction out of the sales moneys, or as far as they would extend; (2) L. & H. were bound to join in the conveyance to G.; (3) G. had by his conduct waived all objections to title; (4) H. could not in this suit have the securities marshalled, notwithstanding that the possibility was pointed out of W. & L. having other securities of sufficient value to cover their advances.

As to the third mtgee.'s claim it is not because these premises are conveyed to the prior mtgees. as a security, inter alia, so that he may have recourse to other funds, that the prior mtgee. is not to have his money out of this fund. He has a right to take the first money that is realised by any of his securities which first comes to hand (WOOD, V.-C.).—WALLIS v. WOODYEAR (1855), 2 Jur. N. S. 179.

balance. He afterwards executed an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, when it appeared that his representations as to his disposal of the goods were untrue, & that he had in fact consigned the goods for sale as & with goods of his own to factors in India, & that the account had been settled between him & the factors on the footing of debiting each cargo only with the advances & charges made in respect of that cargo, but that on the whole account there was a balance coming from the factors:—Held: (1) plffs. were entitled to have the proceeds marshalled, & the advances & charges thrown entirely on the agent's own goods; (2) this right was not excluded by the settlement of accounts between plffs. & the agent, or by the former having had upon the agent's books the means of discovering the fraud before a meeting took place of his creditors, at which plffs. attended, & at which the deed of assignment was agreed to, but at which neither the fraud, nor the claim founded on it, was brought forward, the principle being that means of knowledge to affect a person with constructive notice must be such as a prudent man might be expected to avail himself of; (3) the right was not excluded by the mode in which the factors had rendered their accounts to the agent, nor by their not having themselves set up any claim to marshal the proceeds of the consignments; (4) the enforcement of this right did not preclude plffs. from proving under the deed of assignment for the deficiency.—*BROADBENT v. Goods of principal pledged with agent's securities—Liability on agent's securities.]—A firm in Ceylon employed a firm in England as their agents & factors, the course of business being that the Ceylon firm consigned cargoes to the English firm for sale on their account, & drew bills on the English firm against the consignments. Consignments of coffee having been made in this manner, & bills accepted by the English firm against them, the English firm pledged the coffee, together with certain securities of their own, with T., their broker, to secure a large debt due from them to him. The English firm became insolvent & executed a creditors' deed under Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (c. 134), & then T. sold the coffee, which produced more than sufficient to cover the bills drawn against it, & enough of the other securities to satisfy his debt:—Held: the Ceylon firm were entitled, as against the English firm in liquidation, to have the remaining securities in T.'s hands marshalled, & to have a lien thereon for the balance due to them upon the coffee transaction.—*Re HOLLAND, Ex p. It was also part of the arrangement that the money so advanced should be obtained by the brokers from their bankers on deposit of A.'s securities so purchased. The brokers, however, pledged A.'s securities & their own with their bankers as cover for their current overdraft. On the bkpcy. of the brokers the bank paid themselves by selling A.'s securities & handed over the surplus securities in their hands to the trustee in bkpcy.:—Held: by analogy to the doctrine of marshalling A. was entitled to have the surplus securities in the hands of the trustee applied towards satisfaction of the balance due to him from the broker on the account between them.—*Re BURGE, WOODALL & Co., Ex p. The assets available to the London bankers must be marshalled & the residue, after satisfying the London bankers lien, is payable among the short bills of the bill holders equally.—*Re PARKER, Ex p. 2326. Wrongful pledge of goods to bankers by firm—Security by guarantee of one partner—Securities with bankers marshalled.]—A partnership firm wrongfully pledged to their bankers, to secure a debt of the firm, the delivery warrants of some brandy which had been left in their custody in the ordinary course of business by the owner. One of the partners in the firm had no knowledge of the fraud. The debt due by the firm to the bankers was also secured by a separate guarantee of the innocent partner. The firm filed a liquidation petition, & the bankers sold the brandy, & applied the proceeds of sale in part payment of their debt. The owner of the brandy knew nothing of the pledge until the stoppage of the firm. The separate estate of the innocent partner was sufficient to pay all his separate creditors in full, including the balance remaining due to the bankers, & to leave a surplus:—Held: the owner of the brandy was entitled to have the bankers' securities marshalled, & to the extent of the value of the brandy, to have the benefit of the guarantee, & to prove against the separate estate of the innocent partner.—*Re STRATTON, Ex p. 2340. ———.]—Where the tenant in fee or in tail of an estate becomes entitled to a charge upon the same estate the general rule is that the charge merges, unless it be kept alive by the party entitled to it; & where the merger of the charge would have let in other charges in priority, thereby rendering it the interest of the owner of the estate to keep alive his charge, the ct. presumed that such was his intention, notwithstanding the absence of any other indication of such intention.

The general rule indeed is clear, that, where a party has an estate in fee or in tail, & at the same time a charge upon the estate, the charge will merge. But the law does not, of course, prevent the party entitled to both the estate & the charge from keeping alive the charge; & the rule, therefore, yields to the intention, whether it is expressed or to be presumed (SIR GEORGE TURNER, V.-C.).—*GRICE v. The ct. is guided by the intention; & in the absence of express intention, either in the instrument or by parol, the ct. looks to the benefit of the person in whom the two estates become vested.

If a tenant for life in remainder takes a beneficial lease or an agreement therefor, & subsequently becomes tenant for life in possession, the presumption is against merger in equity.—INGLE v. VAUGHAN-JENKINS, [1900] 2 Ch. 368; 69 L. J. Ch. 618; 83 L. T. 155; 48 W. R. 684.

2347. Merger of equitable estates.—Whether rule applicable when merger of legal estate effected.—[—]—H. was entitled to certain houses for a term of 99 years, less one day, by way of mtge. from W. W. was entitled to the property for the original term subject to the mtge., & H. was entitled to the reversion in fee expectant on the determination of the original term. Under these circumstances W. conveyed the property to H. for the unexpired residue of the original term, & H. covenanted to indemnify W. against the rents & covenants in the lease & the principal & interest secured by the mtge. H. afterwards conveyed by way of sale to W. in fee, the conveyance being expressly "subject to & with benefit of the lease," & W. then conveyed to ptfs. in fee "subject to & with benefit of the lease." H. subsequently purported to convey by way of mtge. in fee to deft., who had no notice of ptf.'s title:—Held: whether the original term had merged in the reversion or not, yet, inasmuch as H. & W. had dealt with one another on the footing that the term was to be deemed in existence, it would be inequitable to allow it to be treated as at an end. H. had therefore, when he purported to convey the fee to deft., an equitable estate to the extent of the leasehold interest, which, under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 63, passed to deft., & ptfs. were bound to give effect to it.

The question whether two equitable estates are merged or not is one of intention. Qu.: whether this rule applies where a merger of legal estate has actually taken place.—THELLUSSON v. LIDDARD, [1900] 2 Ch. 635; 69 L. J. Ch. 673; 82 L. T. 753; 49 W. R. 10.

2348. Merger of term.—[—]—The rule of equity that the question of merger must be decided by the intention of the parties applies to the merger of estates as well as of charges.

In May, 1897, R., as beneficial owner, mortgaged his leasehold interest in certain property in a register county by sub-demise to F. & Co., & he declared himself a trustee of the outstanding day. R. purchased the freehold of the property, & it was conveyed to him, subject to but with the benefit of the lease, by deed of July 27, 1899. By deed of the same date he mortgaged the freehold & leasehold properties referred to in the deeds in the schedule to the ptfs.; the schedule mentioned the freehold title-deeds & the counterpart lease, & the security when offered was described as "a freehold ground-rent." On Aug. 28, 1899, R. was registered under Land Transfer Acts as proprietor of the land with a possessory title. On the same day he charged it with the money due from him to ptfs., & by the same deed conveyed the land to them subject to redemption. Ptfs. were registered as proprietors of the charge, the certificates of registration of both the title & the charge being dated Sept. 18, 1899. F. & Co. took possession under their mtge. Ptfs. brought their action for foreclosure, a declaration that the term had not merged, & that they were entitled to re-enter under the power of re-entry in the lease:—Held: neither on the sale to R. nor on the mtge. by him to ptfs. would the beneficial interest in the term have been deemed to be merged or extinguished in equity, & the case came within Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (4), & there was no merger of the term.—CAPITAL & COUNTIES BANK v. RHODES, [1903] 1 Ch. 631; 72 L. J. Ch. 336; 88 L. T. 255; 51 W. R. 470; 19 T. L. R. 280; 47 Sol. 2350. General rule—Intention from acts of parties.]—A mtge. is not merged by union with the fee: the actual intention, if not established by the acts of the party, is presumed from the greater advantage against merger in favour of the personal representative.

A person becoming entitled to an estate, subject to a charge for his own benefit, may keep up the charge. There is a distinction upon this subject in law & equity; the latter sometimes holding a charge extinguished, where it would subsist at law; & sometimes preserving it, where at law it would be merged; depending on the intention, actual or presumed, of the person, in whom the interests are united. Where, as in most instances, it is, with reference to the party himself, of no sort of use to have a charge on his son, for life; remainder to such uses as J. should by any deed or by will appoint. A portion of the lands was subject to a mtge. prior to the charges. M. brought several of the charges; had them assigned to a trustee for him; & died, having bequeathed these charges to his wife for life, & after her decease to such of her children or grand-children as she should appoint. She by deed appointed these charges to J. after her own death, & in 1848, died. In 1849, J. bought two others of the charges, & had the lands released from them. In 1852, with the intention of borrowing money on mtge., he appointed the lands to himself in fee. In the correspondence about the intended loan, he was apprised that his solr. considered the charges to be merged in the inheritance, & he expressed an intention of charging the lands with a jointure for his wife, & a portion for his daughter. By judgment & otherwise he had, previously to his mother's death, created incumbrances on the lands pious to the family charges. The terms continued outstanding. The lands being sufficient to pay the family charges & the prior mtge. —Held: inasmuch as there was no evidence of an intention expressed by J. to keep the charges alive, & as it could not be shown that it was for his interest to do so, they must be considered, as between his real & personal representatives, as merged in the inheritance. —*PURCELL v. By his will he directed certain other lands to be sold for the purpose of paying off the charges & incumbrances on the lands of B.; & he empowered his trustees, during the minority of his son, to whom he devised the lands of B., & bequeathed his residuary personal estate, to apply the surplus rents of all the lands, & also to sell his personal estate, & apply the proceeds thereof, for the same purpose. By his will D. devised the lands in the following words:—"I give, devise, & bequeath unto M. all, each, & every of my real fee-simple estates . . . & also all & every of my freehold or leasehold property or interests whatsoever, together with their rights, members & appurtenances, that is to say, the fee-simple estate of S., the fee-simple estate of A. . . & all & every of their rights, interests, members & appurtenances, I do give, devise, & bequeath all & every of my aforesaid estates to M. & the heirs male of her body." In the event of M. dying unmarried or intestate the lands were devised to F., with remainders over in the events which happened. Testator appointed M. residuary legatee of his personal estate, & F. residuary legatee in remainder to her. M. predeceased testator, who died in 1878. On the death of F., intestate, in 1899, her administrator claimed to be entitled to the charge of £1,000 which had been assigned by G. to D.: —Held: at the time of the death of D. the charge was clearly in existence, & as the words of the will were insufficient to carry the charge with the devise, & as there was no clear intention on the part of testator that it should merge, the charge was still in existence. —Re BURKE'S ESTATE, Ex p. LYNCH (1904), 38 I. L. T. 174.—IR.

2349 vi.]—A tenant for life of real estate paid off a charge on the fee, & took an absolute release of his estate in the lands, with the intention of extinguishing the charge, under an erroneous belief that he was owner in fee of the lands. He subsequently became aware that he was only tenant for life, & he consulted his solrs., with the view, if possible, of keeping the charge alive for his own benefit, & a case was sent to counsel in reference to the matter, who advised proceedings in Ch., which, however, the tenant for life declined to bring. He made no mention of the charge in his will. There was conflicting evidence as to various expressions of his intention, made subsequent to the payment off of the charge. After his death his exors. brought an action to raise the charge as portion of his assets: —Held: notwithstanding the release of the lands & the other circumstances of the case, the tenant for life was entitled, on discovering his error, to keep the charge alive against the inheritance, & his subsequent acts & declarations sufficiently evidenced that intention. —CONOLLY v. BARTER, [1904] 1 I. R. 130.—IR.

2349 vii.]—Under a settlement, made in 1871, P. was entitled, as equitable tenant for life, to certain lands, with remainder in fee in the event of his dying without issue, subject to the interposed life estate in his wife. At the time of the settlement the lands, which were held under a Church lease, which, in 1873, was converted into a grant in fee, were subject to a charge vested in A. In 1878 P. made his will, wherein, after reciting that, by his marriage settlement, he had given his wife a life estate in the lands, he proceeded: "But if it please Providence that I leave no child, then, from & after the decease of my said wife, I will, bequeath, & direct that the said lands . . . shall be sold . . . & I hereby leave & bequeath the principal sum to be realised by the sale of said property to . . . the . . . bishops of the diocese of O. . . & to their respective successors, . . . in trust to & for the following uses," etc. A. died in 1879, having by her will bequeathed the charge on the said lands to P., who, as her sole exor., obtained probate. Subsequently P. executed three codicils to his will, by each of which he disposed solely of sums of govt. stock. P. died in 1884. On a question subsequently arising as to whether the charge was still a valid & subsisting charge: —Held: on the evidence, the inference to be drawn was that testator intended the charge to merge. —Re BUTLIN'S ESTATE, [1907] 1 I. 2350 i. General rule—Intention from acts of parties.]—The owner of land devised it to his two sons, charged with an annuity to his widow, & also with legacies. After his death, Mar. 1879, the son's devisees mortgaged the land to C. The mtge. was not registered till Jan. 1880, though the widow knew of it. They then raised money from pltf. in Nov. 1879, by a mtge. which was registered in the same month, pltf. having no knowledge of C.'s mtge., & therefore, gaining priority. In this mtgo. to pltf. the widow joined, barring her dower & releasing her annuity for the benefit of pltf. Pltf. sold the land under his mtgo., & there was a considerable surplus, & the question was whether the widow as doweress & annuitant had priority over C.: —Held: the fact that the widow had accepted a conveyance of a moiety of the land from one of the sons did not cause her annuity to merge in whole or in part the mtgo. to C. intervening; & it not being to her interest to hold that a merger had taken place. The question of interest governs merger in the absence of express intention. —MACLENNAN v. GRAY (1889), 16 O. R. 321.—CAN.

2350 ii.]—An owner of property made a grant therefrom of an annuity, with a proviso that, in case of failure to pay the same, the grantee & her heirs should be entitled to take possession of the property. He subsequently mortgaged the same property, by an instrument which set out that it was his absolutely. After this he paid the annuity till the death of the grantee, whose heir he was. The mtgees. obtained a decree upon their deed, & in execution thereof the property was attached & sold, & the decree-holders obtained possession. The heirs of the mtgor. sued the decree-holders for recovery of possession & for arrears of the annuity, claiming under the terms of the grant: —Held: the charge merged & was extinguished, & as the grantor had professed to transfer the property to the mtgees. unincumbered, he was bound to give it over to them free from incumbrance, & it would not lie in his mouth nor in the mouths of his heirs, to set up the charge against the mtgees. & their own estate, it will sink without some act by him to keep it on foot.

In all cases of a charge merging it was perfectly indifferent to the party, in whom the interests had united, whether the charge should, or should not, subsist.—FORBES v. MOFFATT (1811), 18 Ves. 384; 34 E. R. 362.

2351. ———.]—Merger of a charge in the inheritance is not to be assumed, if it would be contrary to the interest of the owner of the estate & charge.

A. devised an estate to his heir, who, in his own right, had a charge on it.

The heir bought up an incumbrance on the estate amounting to £11,555, for £2,000:—Held: he was entitled to the full amount, as against the other incumbrancers, on the estate.

The presumption of equity is that the charge is extinguished, unless the intention of the owner of the inheritance were to keep it on foot; but this intention need not be expressed by any distinct act or words. It may be presumed, but for the purpose of raising such a presumption, it is necessary to observe whether it was most for his benefit to keep on foot or to merge this charge (ROMILLY, M.R.).—*DAVIS v. 2352. ———.]—When the owner of an estate in fee simple becomes entitled to a charge on that estate, prima facie the charge, in equity at least, merges in the inheritance, unless the owner of the estate does some act to keep it alive, or unless, from the circumstances of the case, it would be for his interest that it should continue to be a subsisting charge.

Devise by the owner in fee without mentioning a charge on it to which he was absolutely entitled:—Held: to be some indication of his intention to merge it.

Testator was owner in fee of an estate on which there was a charge of £6,000 to which he was absolutely entitled, & a subsequent charge of a jointure in favour of B. Testator devised the estate in fee to B.:—Held: she took discharged of the mtge.—SWINFEN v. SWINFEN (No. 3) (1860), 29 Beav. 199; 4 L. T. 194; 7 Jur. N. S. 89; 9 W. R. 175; 54 E. R. 603.

2353. ———.]—Where a charge on an estate becomes vested absolutely in the owner of the inheritance of the estate, the three tests usually applied for ascertaining whether the charge has merged are:—First, whether there has been an actual expression of intention to that effect; secondly, whether the acts done by the owner of the estate are only consistent with the charge being kept on foot; & thirdly, whether it is for the interest of the owner that the charge should not merge in the inheritance.

As to the effect of an expression of intention, on the part of the owner of the inheritance of an estate, as to the merger of a charge thereon, made previous to his becoming absolute owner of the charge.

A fund, which was held in trust for A. for life, with remainder to B. absolutely, was lent by the trustees, B. & C., to B., on mtge. of his fee simple estates. By the mtge. deed, the trustees declared that they would hold the fund, after the decease of A., for "B., his exors., administrators & assigns, for his & their absolute benefit." B. survived A. & died:—Held: this was not a sufficient indication of a contrary intention to prevent the merger of the charge in the inheritance.—TYRWHITT v. TYRWHITT (1863), 32 Beav. 244; 1 New Rep. 458; 32 L. J. Ch. 553; 8 L. T. 140; 9 Jur. N. S. 346; 11 W. R. 409; 55 E. R. 96.

2354. ———.]—Where the owner of an equity of redemption pays off a mtge. & takes an assignment of the mtge., & the documents or circumstances show an intention to keep alive the security, it is not extinguished, but enures for the benefit of the owner of the equity of redemption.

When the owner of an estate pays charges on the estate which he is not personally liable to pay, the question whether those charges are to be considered as extinguished or as kept alive for his benefit is simply a question of intention. You may find the intention in the deed, or you may find it in the circumstances attending the transaction, or you may presume an intention from considering whether it is or is not for his benefit that the charge should be kept on foot (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—*THORNE v. having devised her estate in fee to B., whom she also appointed exor. B. paid simple contract debts & legacies of A. to a greater amount than was due on foot of the judgment mtge. B. died without having given any indication of intention to keep alive the mtges.:—Held: as by the payment of simple contract debts & legacies, B.

2357. — Whether presumption against merger.—Where the same person becomes absolutely entitled to an estate & a sum of money charged upon it, the charge will be deemed extinguished, unless it appears that the owner intended otherwise.

For the purpose of showing the intention, evidence direct & presumptive may be resorted to. A transfer to a trustee must be considered as one of the grounds rebutting the presumption of merger; but does not amount to decisive evidence against the presumption.

B., the owner in fee of an estate, paid off a mtge. in fee existing on it, which in 1807 was transferred to a trustee, in trust for A. B., her "heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns respectively"; & the trustee covenanted to convey to B., her heirs or assigns, or unto such other person or persons, & in such manner & form as B., her heirs, exors., administrators, or assigns should direct. B. devised the estate to a trustee to pay certain specified legacies, & subject thereto, she devised it to C. in fee, "& upon or for no other use, trust, intent, or purpose whatsoever." B. died in 1832:—Held: the mtge. had merged.—HOOD v. PHILLIPS (1841), 3 Beav. 513; 49 E. R. 202.

2358. ——(1) Charge paid off by a person having only a partial interest in the estate:—Held: not to have merged.

(2) In 1824, A. purchased an estate, & he mtged. it to raise part of the purchase-money. In Feb. 1840, the mtge. was paid off & transferred to B., who in Apr. 1840, executed a declaration of trust in favour of A. A. died in 1818:—Held: the charge had merged.

(3) What the ct. is to look at is, to see what was the intention of the person who paid off the charge. That intention, in the absence of any circumstances, is to be gathered from what it was his interest to do; but if there be any circumstances affecting the matter, they also are to be regarded. He caused it to be assigned to a trustee in trust for him, his heirs, etc. It was preserved, & is a subsisting charge (ROMILLY, M.R.).—PITT v. PITT (1856), 22 Beav. 294; 27 L. T. O. 2359. — Burden of proof.—The owner in fee bought up an existing building lease of the property, & had it assigned to a trustee, in trust for him, "his exors., administrators & assigns":—Held: (1) the presumption was that the lease had not, in equity, merged in the inheritance, but that it passed as part of her personal estate; (2) the burden of proof was on those who asserted the contrary.—GUNTER v. GUNTER (1857), 23 Beav. 571; 29 L. T. O. S. 244; 3 Jur. N. S. 1018; 5 W. R. 485; 53 E. R. 225.

of years created for raising the same; he appointed £13,000 part thereof among four of his daughters, on their respective marriages & took assignments from them of their interests in the term. On the marriage of the eldest son, G. & the eldest son covenant that the settled estate is free from all incumbrances. After this G. makes his will & appoints the remaining £3,000 to his only unmarried daughter. Notwithstanding the clear intention of G. to keep the term alive for his benefit, yet his covenant in the son's marriage settlement will bar his claim of any benefit from it as against the parties interested under that settlement.—GOWER (COUNTESS DOWAGER) v. GOWER (EARL) (1783), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 53; 29 E. R. 1059.

2361. — Whether charge covered by general words.—C., the owner of leaseholds, renewable by custom, contracted, in 1798, to redeem the land tax thereon, under 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, & transferred to the comrs. a sum of consols for that purpose, but did not exercise the option under s. 17 of the Act. After the death of C., T. & M., who were entitled in equal shares to the leaseholds under his will, which contained no reference to the land tax, & also to his residuary personal estate, by a settlement made in 1818, assigned the leaseholds, & all their "estate & interest" therein, to trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. The recitals did not refer to the land tax. T. died in 1821, having made no claim to a moiety of the charge in respect of the land tax. On the death of M., the personal representative of T. & M. claimed, as against those entitled under the settlement, a charge in respect of the land tax:—Held: C., on redeeming the land tax, became entitled to the interest on the consols transferred by him as a rent charge on the leaseholds for his own benefit; it did not pass under the general words of the settlement of 1818, but remained as a separate property in the settlors, as residuary legatees of C.—NEAME v. MOORSOM (1866), L. R. 3 Eq. 91; 36 L. J. Ch. 274; 12 Jur. N. S. 913; 15 W. R. 51.

2362. — Mortgage—No reference to charge—Subsequent gift by will in general terms.—A. devised his real estates to B. in fee, charged with £1,000, which he gave to B. in trust to be laid out for the separate use of C., his sister, for her life, & after her decease, as she should by her will appoint, & in default of appointment, to be retained by B. B. devised the estates to trustees in trust for C. & D. as tenants in common, in fee, subject to his debts, etc., & by a codicil he directed his personal estate to be first applied in payment of his debts, legacies, etc. After B.'s death, the trustees conveyed the estates to C. & D. as tenants in common in fee, subject to the £1,000, & other incumbrances. C. & D. having agreed to make partition, one moiety of the estates was conveyed to C. in fee, subject to a term for indemnifying D. from the £1,000, & the other moiety was conveyed to D. in fee. C. afterwards mortgaged her moiety in fee; & by her will, without referring to the £1,000, disposed of her personal estate in general terms:—Held: the £1,000 was merged.—TYLER v. LAKE (1831), 4 Sim. 351; 58 E. R. 131.

Annotation:—Apld. Re Gibbon, Moore v. Gibbon, [1909] 1 Ch. 387.

2363. — Equitable mortgage.—In 1866 A. mortgaged freeholds to D. in fee. In 1867 D. charged his mtge. debt & created a term of 1,000 years to secure the charge. In 1868 D. foreclosed A., & between 1870 & 1872 mortgaged the fee to G. to secure sums amounting to £5,411. In 1872 D. by his marriage settlement also charged the fee with £5,000, which sum, in the events which happened, became held in trust for him. In 1874 D.'s equity of redemption under his mtges. of 1870 to 1872 & his interest in the £5,000 were conveyed to G. subject to all existing charges & with a declaration against merger. In 1900 G. took a transfer of the charge, then reduced to £9,800, & term of years created by the mtge. of 1867 with a declaration against merger, & in 1902 he deposited the deeds of 1866, 1867, & 1900 with a memorandum of deposit with M. by way of equitable mtge. On G.'s death intestate the question arose between his real & personal representatives whether the above-mentioned three charges of £9,800, £5,411, & £5,000 or any of them had merged in the fee:—Held: the charges of £5,411 & £5,000 had merged in the fee, for that it would be a fraud on M. to keep them alive against him in favour of G., his mtgor.—Re GIBBON, MOORE v. GIBBON, [1909] 1 Ch. 367; 78 L. J. Ch. 264; 100 L. T. 231; 53 Sol. Jo. 177.

2364. ——— Separate mortgages of term & reversion.—Two properties A. & B. having been included in one lease at a low ground rent & subsequently separately assigned by the lessees, the reversioners in fee took an assignment of property A. & four other leasehold properties for the residue of the respective terms. There was no direct evidence that they then had any intention against merger. About nine months later the reversioners by a mtge., which recited that the term in property A. & the reversion in fee subject to the term were vested in them as tenants in common, mortgaged the term & the entire reversion separately:—Held: having regard to the form of the mtge. & the covenants for title therein contained, the mtge. was admissible as evidence not only that the reversioners then believed that there was no merger, but that such was their intention at the time when they took the assignment of the term:—Held: on the construction of the assignment & the mtge., the term had not merged.—*Re FLETCHER, READING v. successive tenants for life. The first tenant for life being a lady of advanced age, & desirous of relinquishing the management of the lands, by deed conveyed them to the second tenant for life hold to him, his heirs & assigns, during all the remainder of her life, to the use that she might thenceforth during the remainder of her life receive an annual sum of £400 to be issuing out of the rents & profits, & subject thereto to the use of the second tenant for life, his heirs & assigns, during the remainder of her life. The deed contained a proviso reducing the amount of the rentcharge so long as she continued to reside with him & he provided her with certain conveniences. He having died in her lifetime:—Held: Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (4), applied to the case; &, having regard to the intention of the parties manifest on the face of the deed, there was no merger of the estate of the first tenant for life in that of the second tenant for life.

C. Property of Infant or Lunatic.

2367. Property of infant subject to charge—Whether merger presumed.—DONISTHORPE v. POWER, No. 2331, ante.

2368. ———.]—(1) A representative must take his interest as fortune has directed it, & has no equity to vary it; therefore where a lunatic dies entitled to an estate, & also to a charge upon it, the heir takes it discharged: a trust term to secure the charge makes no difference; for it remains inert, unless required to be executed for proper purposes; the trustees have no discretion.

(2) At law & in equity where there is a confusion of rights, there is an immediate merger: that is prevented in equity by the intention, either express or implied, as in the case of an infant entitled to an estate, & also to a charge upon it, the rights remain distinct because more beneficial.—*COMPTON (LORD) v. 2372. ———.]—H. by her will appointed D. her exor. & trustee, but, in the events which happened, died in 1896 intestate as to her real & personal estate, leaving her brother, a lunatic, her sole next of kin & heir-at-law. out of the personal estate. The lunatic died intestate in 1903; his income was more than sufficient for his maintenance, the surplus rents of his real estate were accumulated during his life, & the accumulations were more than sufficient to have paid the amount of the estate duly attributable to the real estate. The lunatic's next of kin claimed to be entitled to a charge on his real estate for the amount of duty paid in respect thereof out of his personal estate:—Held: assuming the payment of the estate duty created a charge upon the real in favour of the personal estate, any charge which might have existed at the time of the payment of the duty on the realty out of the personalty in favour of the personalty was extinguished before the death of the lunatic; as there was no interest in the lunatic requiring the charge to be kept alive, & under the circumstances, no person who could require the charge to be raised, it had merged.—*Re HOLE, DAVIES v. D. Interest held in Different Capacities.

2373. General rule.—No merger of interests held in different rights.—A fund was limited in trust successively for husband & wife for life, & then upon trust for the children of the marriage, as they jointly, or the survivor of them should appoint, & in default of appointment, in equal shares, to be vested at 21. There were two children of the marriage who attained 21, one of whom afterwards died. No appointment having been made, the husband, after the death of his wife, released the power, so as to vest a moiety of the fund in himself as administrator of the deceased child, & he claimed to have such moiety; transferred to him:—Held: he was entitled to a transfer upon surrendering his life interest in the moiety; but he was not entitled so long as he retained his life interest, inasmuch as there could be no merger of two interests held in different rights.—*Re RADCLIFFE, RADCLIFFE v. The leasehold estates vest absolutely, in the tenant in tail upon his birth & the power is void.

(2) If a tenant in tail adult pays off a mtge., or becomes entitled to a charge, as he might acquire the absolute ownership, a presumption arises that his intention was not to keep alive the charge. But that principle does not apply during infancy. I have made it a rule, where property of one nature has been applied for the benefit of an infant to property of another nature, to have an express provision, that if he shall not attain the age at which he will have a disposable power, the representative shall not be prejudiced by the act done by the ct. in contemplation of the infant's benefit (LORD ELDON, C.).—WARE v. (2) Where a tenant in tail in possession pays off a mortgage, & declares no intention that the charge shall continue for the benefit of the personal estate, there the charge ceases; because the estate is considered as his own, inasmuch as he may make it his own by suffering a recovery. 2387 i. Intention presumed from interest of owner.]—A testator was possessed of considerable property as owner in fee simple consequent upon his execution of a disentailing deed by which he converted an estate in tail into an estate in fee. Prior to the execution of the disentailing deed he had paid off charges upon the property and had caused an assignment of the charges to be made to trustees to keep the charges on foot for his benefit, or had caused memorandum of the fact to be endorsed on the receipts. Subsequently to the disentailing deed he paid off other charges, but only took in simple receipts for them. By his will he left all his property in the county R., and situate in certain parishes, to his brothers, free from all charges. The testator was possessed of other property in the county R., not in the parishes mentioned:—Held: that only the property in the parishes named by the will passed by the devise, and that it being for the benefit of the testator to have kept the charges alive, he must be presumed to have intended to keep them on foot, & they continued a charge on the undevise portion of the estate.—KEOGH v. A. died a spinster, having by her will devised her real estate & bequeathed her personal estate to different persons, without mention of the charge, & without having indicated any intention during her life either to keep the charge subsisting or to extinguish it:—Held: that A. had, at the date of her death, such an estate in the lands as to admit of the making of the presumption that the charge had become extinguished, & that, as it was a matter of indifference to her whether the charge was kept alive or not, the charge had become extinguished, the date when it so ceased to exist being her death.—Re TOPPIN'S ESTATE, [1915] 1 I. 2403.1. Charge paid off by tenant for life.—By his will W. J. W. devised the lands for sale to his son Thomas in tail, with remainder to Alfred in tail, with remainder to William in tail, with remainder to John in tail; & he charged the lands with ten sums of money in favour of his younger children. On testator's death Thomas entered into possession, & died without issue in 1877, & Alfred, having predeceased Thomas, & having left no issue, William succeeded, & died in 1902 without issue, & without having disentailed. During his lifetime

William bought the legacy of £500 bequeathed to his brother Henry by the will of his father, & got it assigned to him by deed in 1884. In 1889 he paid off the legacy of £1,000 bequeathed to one of his sisters, Mrs. P., without getting any assignment. By his will dated in 1900, William left legacies of £1,000 each to his two sisters, Mrs. M. & Mrs. C., provided that they should, within one month, give notice in writing to the exors. that they accepted the legacies in satisfaction & discharge of all claims upon the lands, & he directed that these notices should be handed over to John, the next tenant in tail in remainder. He bequeathed to John his own legacy of £500, & also the legacy purchased by him from Henry, & appointed John his residuary legatee. The lands were sold in the Land Judge's ct., & the estate was insolvent. On the final schedule of incumbrances the exors. of William were returned as incumbrancers in respect of the three legacies of £1,000 left to the testator's three sisters, which he had paid off. On an objection filed by the assignee of another legatee, whose legacy was charged on the lands:—Held: the three charges were merged, & the exors. were not entitled to be placed on the schedule of incumbrancers.—Re WALLACE'S ESTATE, CAULFIELD, PETITIONER, [1907] 1 L. R. 91.—IR.

the charge, & obtained releases. At the time, he seemed to have conceived that, as residuary legatee, he was liable to pay the amount out of the personal estate, which was sufficient for that purpose. Nothing was done to keep the charge on foot. After the death of the tenant for life, it being determined that the £25,000 was a primary charge on the real estate:—Held: it still subsisted as a charge on the settled estates, for the benefit of the personal representatives of the tenant for life.

(4) In 1773, a tenant for life paid off a charge of £25,000, affecting the settled estates. He died in 1837, having in the meantime taken no steps for keeping the charge alive:—Held: Statute of Limitations cannot be applied to a case, where there is no assignable person liable to pay the charge, no person who, by the delay, could be induced to suppose that the charge was abandoned or merged, & where the rent, out of which the interest of the charge ought to be paid, is receivable by & belongs to the same person who is entitled to the interest.—*BURRELL v. After the marriage he paid off the mtg. debt out of his own moneys, & the mtgee. executed a deed which purported to reconvey the mortgaged property to him "absolutely discharged from" the mtg. debt & all claims under the mtg. deed. The solrs. who prepared the reconveyance were ignorant of the existence of the settlement.

In an action by the reversioner, claiming to have the reconveyance set aside or rectified, he gave evidence that he did not intend to pay off the mtg. debt for the benefit of the settlement, but that he intended to keep the charge alive for his own benefit:—Held: notwithstanding the form of the reconveyance, pltf. was entitled to have the charge kept alive for his own benefit, & the sum secured by the mtg. constituted a charge on the property having priority over the settlement.—*GIFFORD (LORD) v. The value of the mortgaged property did not exceed £1,380. The second mtgee. contended that the effect of this purchase was to extinguish the first mtg. debt, & to let in his own charge as a first incumbrance. A correspondence took place between the solrs. of the first mtgee. & the trustee at the time of the purchase:—Held: (1) (*CT. b. To show intention.—Prior to 1818, the lands of D. were charged with a sum of £5,000. IR., & stood limited to the Earl of Wicklow for life, remainder to his eldest son in tail.

J.—VOL. XX.

Prior to the same date, the estates of the earldom were subject to various charges amounting to £40,000, & were vested in the Earl of Wicklow in tail. By articles executed on the son's marriage, reciting that "said several estates (i.e. the lands of D. & the Earl's other estates) stand charged with the payment respectively of several sums of money, amounting in the whole to the sum of £45,000 or thereabouts," it was agreed to resettle all the estates on the Earl for life, remainder to his son for life, remainder to his first & other sons in tail, remainder over, free from all incumbrances, except the said several charges, not exceeding in the whole the sum of £45,000. By settlement made in 1824, in pursuance of the articles, the estates were accordingly conveyed to trustees, subject to the said sum of £45,000, or so much thereof as then stood charged on said premises. In 1822 the son, who had become the Earl of Wicklow, & succeeded to the estates as tenant for life in possession, paid off the charge of £5,000 on D. & got it assigned to a trustee for himself. In 1827, the trustees of the settlement of 1824, under a power of sale & exchange therein, sold the lands of F., of the estates of the earldom. The son, the then Earl of Wicklow, joined in the conveyance to the purchaser, which recited that all the parties who had any claim, & were entitled to any part of the £45,000, had been paid off, & had executed releases for their shares of the £45,000, except two portions which were specified, not embracing the £5,000. The estates were again resettled in 1849 by the then Earl of Wicklow & his son, who were then respectively tenant for life & tenant in tail in remainder, by a deed which at the time of the purchase, was admissible in evidence, on the question whether it was intended to keep the first mtge. alive.

(3) The mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. If a charge is paid off by a tenant for life without any expression of his intention he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance. Although he has not declared his intention of keeping it alive, it is presumed that his intention was to keep it alive, because it is manifestly for his benefit. On the other hand, when the owner of an estate in fee or in tail pays off a charge, the presumption is the other way, but in either case the person paying off the charge can, by expressly declaring his intention, either keep it alive or destroy it. If there is no reason for keeping it alive, then, especially in the case of an owner in fee, equity will, in the absence of any declaration of his intention, destroy it; but if there is any reason for keeping it alive, such as the existence of another incumbrance, equity will not destroy it (JESSEL, M.R.).—ADAMS v. ANGELL (1877), 5 Ch. D. 634; 46 L. J. Ch. 54, 352; 36 L. T. 334, C. A.

2426. Penalties not inflicted by court of equity.]

—9 Ann. c. 14, ss. 3, 4, & 18 Geo. 2, c. 34, s. 3, do not authorise cts. of equity to hold cognisance of a bill by a common informer for a discovery of money won at play; for the latter statute empowers the ct. to proceed to a decree, & a ct. of equity does not decree a penalty.—HOLLOWAY v. SHAKESPEARE (1803), 1 Smith, K. B. 121.

2427. ———.]—It is the function of equity to relieve from penalties & not to inflict others in addition to those imposed by an Act of Parliament.

If a man is directed to do an act & does not do it & is made liable to a penalty by Act of Parliament, equity has no right to add an additional penalty; on the contrary the ordinary principle of equity is did not refer to the deed of 1827, but which recited that, by a disentailing deed of Feb. 7, 1849, the estates had been conveyed subject "to such charges as were subsisting on or before the execution of the deed of 1824, & were continuing," & settled the estates subject to them & to the life estate of the Earl, & all powers & authorities, etc., annexed to that estate. There was distinct evidence to show that the Earl dealt with the charge of £5,000 during his life as a subsisting charge, & as part of his personal estate.—Held: the deed of 1824 left the £5,000 charged as it was on the lands of D. alone, & did not extend the charge to the other estates; (2) that the recital of the deed of 1827 did not operate as conclusive evidence against the Earl to show that he then meant to release the inheritance from the charge; (3) that the recital, though evidence against him, was capable of being met by evidence on his part, showing an intention not to merge the charge in the inheritance.—LINDSAY v. WICKLOW (1873), 7 I. R. Eq. 192.—IR.

SUB-SECT. 2.—WHAT AMOUNTS TO A PENALTY.

A. In General.

2428. What is a penalty.—Where a sum is payable as a punishment for a default, or by way of security, & the realisation of that sum is not within the original intention of the parties, the sum is a penalty; but when it forms part of the original intention that upon default a sum otherwise payable at a future period, shall become forthwith payable, it is no longer a penalty (BRAMWELL, L.J.).—PROTECTOR LOAN CO. v. GRICE (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 592; 49 L. J. Q. B. 812; 43 L. T. 564; 45 J. P. 172, C. A.

C. Agreement varying Payment of Debt.

2429. General rule—Conditions must be complied with.—Equity will relieve against almost all penalties whatsoever; against non-payment of money at a certain day; against forfeitures of copyholds: but they are all such cases where the ct. can do it with safety to the other party; for if the ct. cannot put him into as good condition as if the agreement had been performed, the ct. will not relieve. There are some exceptions to this rule; one of which is, where a voluntary composition is to be paid at a time certain, & in a certain manner. In that case, it is the voluntary bounty of the creditor, to remit part of the debt, & the terms must be strictly complied with (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—ROSE v. ROSE (1756), Amb. 331; 27 E. R. 222.

2431. Debt reducible on punctual payment—Default in payment—Whole debt payable.—A creditor agreed to take less than his debt, so as the money was paid at a certain day; the money not being paid at the day, he sued for the whole:—Held: debtor not relievable.—SEWELL v. MUSSON (1683), 1 Vern. 210; 23 E. R. 420.

2432. —————When a mtgee. agrees to take a portion of his debt in lieu of the whole, upon payment on a given day, the ct. will not relieve against the effect of its non-payment on that day.

D. was indebted to C. in £69,000. By deed made between D., C. & S., a surety, C. covenanted that if D. or S. should pay him £38,000 on a day named, he would accept it in full satisfaction of the whole debt. D. covenanted to pay it on the day, & D. & S. covenanted to pay interest on it to the day & afterwards. Default was made in payment, but interest was, for four years afterwards, received by C. on the £38,000:—Held: D. was liable for the whole debt of £69,000, & was entitled to no equitable relief against the default in payment on the day fixed.—FORD v. CHESTERFIELD (EARL) (1854), 19 Beav. 428; 24 L. T. O. S. 30; 52 E. R. 416.

Annotations.—Distd. Thompson v. Hudson (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 612. Reid. Ram Gopal Mookerjee v. Masseyk (1860), 8 Moo. Ind. App. 239.

2433. —————The reservation of a right to have full payment of money actually due on an existing contract, should there be a failure to pay a smaller sum on a day certain, cannot be treated as a penalty. Therefore, where a certain sum of money is due, & the creditor enters into arrangements with his debtor to take a lesser sum provided that sum is secured in a certain way & paid at a certain day, but if any of the stipulations of the arrangement are not performed as agreed upon, the creditor is to be entitled to recover the whole of the original debt, such remitter to his original rights does not constitute a penalty, & equity will not interfere to prevent its observance. If, in such a case, it is one of the stipulations that a mtge. is to be given on a certain day, & it is not given till two days afterwards, & is then accepted by the creditor, such acceptance, though a waiver as to the mtge., is not a waiver of the creditor's general rights on the contract.

H. was indebted to T. & S. in three different sums of money, which were the subjects of suits in chancery. In the first & third of these suits the sums had been ascertained, but no final decree had been made respecting them. In the second suit there had been a final decree. H. wished for time & facilities to be afforded him for payment of these debts. T. & S. consented, & deeds were executed by which it was arranged that H. should admit the amount of the debts claimed in the first & third suits, & should not use his power to appeal against the decree in the second suit; that he should give a first mtge. on his real estate as a security; & that he should pay certain amounts on certain days. On these conditions T. & S. were to accept smaller sums in satisfaction. The deeds expressly reserved to T. & S. the right, if any of the stipulations in the deeds were violated, to enforce payment of the original amounts found & admitted to be due:—Held: this reservation of the right to enforce existing debts on non-payment of the smaller & covenanted amounts, was not a penalty against which equity would grant relief.

I take the law to be perfectly clear upon these matters which we have to consider with reference to this & the subsequent agreements, namely, that where there is a debt actually due, & in respect of that debt a security is given, be it by way of mtge. or be it by way of stipulation that in case of its not being paid at the time appointed a larger sum shall become payable, & be paid, in either of those cases equity regards the security that has been given as a mere pledge for the debt, & it will not allow either a forfeiture of the property pledged, or any augmentation of the debt as a penal provision, on the ground that equity regards the contemplated forfeiture which might take place at law with reference to the estate as in the nature of a penal provision, against which equity will relieve when the object in view, namely, the securing of the debt, is attained, & regarding also the stipulation for the payment of a larger sum of money, if the sum be not paid at the time it is due, as a penalty & a forfeiture against which equity will relieve. Now, that being clear on the one hand, it is equally clear on the other that where there is a debt due, & an agreement is entered into at the time of that debt having become due & not being paid, in regard to further indulgence to be conceded to the debtor, or further time to be accorded to him for the payment of the debt, or in regard to his paying it immediately, if that be a portion of the stipulations of the agreement, or at some future time which may be named, & the creditor is willing to allow him certain advantages & deductions from that debt, as well as to extend the time for its payment, if adequate & proper security in the mind of the creditor be afforded him as his part of the bargain in respect of which he is to make these concessions, then it is perfectly competent to the creditor to say. . . . I am entitled to be replaced in the position in which I was when this agreement . . . was entered into (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—THOMPSON v. HUDSON (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 1; 38 L. J. Ch. 431, H. L.

2434. — — — — —.]—A creditor having issued a debtor's summons in respect of a judgment debt of £344, an agreement was made that the debtor should give the creditor a cheque for £50, & three bills of exchange for £50 each, accepted by a third person, & payable respectively in three, six, & nine months, & that, upon payment of the cheque & the bills in due course, & a receipt for a debt due by the creditor to the debtor's brother being handed to the creditor, he should give a receipt in full satisfaction of the judgment debt. In default of payment of any or either of the cheque or bills, the creditor was to be at liberty to proceed for the full amount due. The cheque & the first two bills were paid in due course, but the third bill was not paid at maturity, the acceptor having forgotten to provide his bankers with funds to meet it. The creditor issued a writ against the acceptor, & he paid the dishonoured bill within a week after it became due. The creditor then issued a debtor's summons against the debtor for the unpaid balance of the original debt:—Held: the provision in the agreement for the revivor of the original debt upon default being made in the performance of any of the conditions was not a penalty, but on the dishonour of the third bill the creditor was remitted to his original right, & he had not waived that right by suing the acceptor.—*Re NEIL, Ex p. The first half year's interest not having been tendered till after the three months, but the second half year's interest before:—Held: (1) mtgee. was only entitled to interest at 5 per cent. for the half year which had been tendered after the time; (2) in consequence of the default, he was entitled to call in his money.—STANHOPE v. Stipulation that time to be of the essence of the contract—Not real intention of vendor to carry out stipulation.]—A stipulation in an agreement of sale of land that time shall be considered to be of the essence of the contract will be treated, when everything goes to show that it was not the real intention of the vendor to insist on its being strictly carried out, as only in the nature of a penalty which a ct. of equity should relieve against.—BARLOW v. WILLIAMS (1906), 16 Man. L. R. 164.—CAN.

e. —.]—By agreement dated June 7, 1906, pltf. sold to deft. 625 acres of land for $17,500, $1,000 being payable on the execution of the agreement & the balance in yearly instalments with interest. It was provided that on default in payment of any instalment the whole of the purchase-money & interest should at once become due & payable. Owing to some difficulty over the title to the property the agreement was not completed until Nov. 8, 1907, when each party got a duplicate signed by the other & deft. paid $957.60 of the $1,000 payable on the execution of the agreement. On the date there was also paid due the second instalment of the purchase-money & some taxes which deft. had covenanted to pay. It was admitted that, prior to the completion of the agreement by delivery, a verbal agreement was arrived at extending the time for payment of the second instalment, but the parties differed as to the terms of this verbal agreement, & as it would contradict the writing, the trial judge held that it should not be given effect to & that pltf. was not bound by it. Pltf. demanded payment of the full amount of the purchase-money, claiming that it was due by virtue of the acceleration clause above quoted. Deft. asked that, upon payment of all arrears, he might be relieved from the effect of the acceleration clause:—Held: such a provision in a contract is not in the nature of a penalty against which equity will relieve.—VOSPER v. AUBERT (1908), 18 Man. L. R. 17.—CAN.

Default having been made, the co. sued to enforce the forfeiture; applt. paid into ct. the instalment due & counterclaimed for specific performance:—Held: by the law of British Columbia as well as by English law the condition of forfeiture was in the nature of a penalty from which applt. was entitled to be relieved on payment of the purchase-money due.—*KILMER v. The agreement provided that, if the purchaser should make default in any of the payments, the vendor should be at liberty to cancel the agreement & to retain, as liquidated damages, the payments already made, & that time was to be considered as of the essence of the agreement. Default having been made in the payment of the first instalment, the vendor cancelled the agreement; assignees of the purchaser sued for specific performance:—Held: the parties having made time of the essence of the agreement, specific performance could not be decreed; but the forfeiture of the money paid was a penalty from which relief should be granted on proper terms.—*STEEDMAN v. g. Default by purchaser—Retention of deposit.]—Pltf. sold certain land to deft. under contract providing for payment in instalments, & containing a provision for determination of the contract by the vendor upon default by purchaser, & providing that upon such determination the vendor might retain all moneys paid under the contract. Deft. paid the first instalment only, & having made default in the next instalment, pltf., after repeatedly demanding settlement, which was not obtained, determined the contract under the provisions therein contained, & brought this action for a declaration that such cancellation was effective & that she was entitled to retain the moneys paid:—Held: were it not for the clause in question permitting the retention of moneys paid, deft., upon the rescission of the contract, would be entitled to the return of such moneys, but the contract prevents this, & in effect, works a forfeiture against which the ct. has power to relieve upon equitable grounds.—*HOLA v. S. for the purchase by pltf. of a section of land; pltf. examined the land; & after he had done so, paid S. $50, & took a receipt from S. for that sum, "part payment" on the land describing it, "balance to be paid in fourteen days from date, this receipt is conditional to the approval of option." Three days after the expiry of the fourteen days, pltf. gave S. a further sum of $300, & S. gave him a receipt therefor: "Received of C. $300 on section 5 balance to be paid in ten days." Before the ten days had expired pltf. & deft. met, & deft. tendered to pltf. for signature a formal agreement for the sale & purchase of the land; but pltf. refused to sign this, because the terms were not in accordance with the oral agreement arrived at when the first payment was made. Nothing further was done, & pltf. sued for the two sums of $50 & $300 as money paid upon a consideration which had failed:—Held: the $300 was a payment on account of purchase-money, & its forfeiture, on the cancellation of the contract, was a penalty from which pltf. should be relieved, deft. having since sold the land at an advanced price.—FUNK v. SIMONSON (1911), 19 W. L. R. 93.—CAN.

estate to deft. to secure £3,300 payable within three months of A.'s death. He also by an agreement, signed afterwards, tacked to this security a charge of £400, with interest at 25 per cent. per month:—Held: (1) pltf.'s interest, with regard to the jointure charge, was not reversionary so as to bring the case under the rule applicable to mtges. of reversionary interest; (2) the principle under which reversioners are specially protected in relation to dealings with their reversions is not one which the ct. is disposed to extend by analogy; (3) the mere fact that a borrower was in great want of money, & the lender exacted exorbitant interest will not induce the ct. to interfere in behalf of the former; (4) the mtge. deed provided for satisfaction & reconveyance upon pltf.'s paying £1,500 by a certain day, a year later, with interest, etc.; (5) Semble: the additional £500 could not be regarded as a penalty.—*WEBSTER v. 2451. General rule.]—No relief against a voluntary forfeiture of copyhold estate, as by making a lease without licence from the lord. But it is otherwise where the forfeiture was only intended by way of security for sums due. As of a fine or rent, for there, upon payment of what is due, with interest, equity will relieve.

The true ground of relief against penalties is from the original intent of the case where the penalty is designed only to secure money & the ct. gives him all that he expected or desired (LORD MACCLESFIELD, C.).—*PEACHY v. 2443 iii. ———.]—Where a stipulation in a mtge. bond for increased interest on default is retrospective, & the increased interest runs from the date of the bond, & not merely from the date of the default, it is always to be construed as a penalty, because an additional money payment becomes

Bkpt. made such frequent default in the regular supply of the cloth, that he incurred penalties to the amount of £3,870, which the creditor claimed to prove, although no specific damage was alleged to have been sustained by him by the non-performance of the agreement;

& the only balance really due to him was £48 18s. 6d.:—Held: this was a claim for unliquidated damages founded on a penalty, & was therefore not the subject of proof.

As the cts. have from all time endeavoured to relieve parties from penalties where no damage has been sustained, it appears to me to be the duty of this ct. to relieve bkpt. & his estate from this exorbitant demand, & to prevent petitioner from coming in competition with the bond fide creditors of bkpt. Even if petitioner could have proceeded at law to recover this penalty, it is so unreasonable & unjust, that there is no doubt but that a ct. of equity would have relieved against it (SIR JOHN CROSS).—Ex p. Balance of sum due payable on contingency.]—Pltf. was entitled to receive from deft. a commission of $2,000 on the sale of land for deft.; but was induced to accept $1,000 down & to agree to a postponement of payment of the balance. Pltf.'s understanding of the agreement was that he was to receive the balance whenever deft. should be paid the next instalment of the purchase-money; that, if it was never paid, he should receive nothing; but he signed a letter, drawn up by deft.'s solr., by which he waived all claim for the balance of $1,000, if the instalment & interest is not paid on June 12, 1912, the date fixed for payment of the instalment. The instalment was not paid to deft. on the due date, but was paid later, & pltf. sued for the $1,000:—Held: pltf. was entitled to equitable relief against what was in reality a penalty or

The forfeiture & the relief against it are founded upon this: the forfeiture arises out of the contract: the parties covenant for their own security: therefore the breach works a forfeiture: but if the party can be restored to the same situation, the right to relief arises. . . . Undoubtedly unless it is plain that full compensation can be given so as to put the other party in the same situation precisely, a ct. of equity ought not to act; for such a jurisdiction would be arbitrary. . . . The proposition that where the damages are uncertain, relief cannot be given, is equivalent to this; that in such a case as this where clear compensation can be made the rule should be different (LORD ERSKINE, C.).—*SANDERS v. 2475. ———.]—The ct. will not give relief in equity against a lessor's right of re-entry, for a forfeiture by breach of a covenant to lay out a sum of money on the premises in repairs within a given time; & that notwithstanding there have been no requisition made by the landlord, for performance of the covenant, & although he have suffered the tenant to continue in possession of the premises for three years after the breach of covenant, but has not received rent from him in the mean time, or otherwise recognised the subsistence of the tenancy. The time within which the covenant was to have been performed having been limited by the lease, is equivalent to a specific requisition of performance by the lessor; & a neglect on the part of the tenant, is tantamount to a refusal in law.

(2) The ground on which the ct. refuse to relieve, in such a case, is, that they have no effectual means of ascertaining, or of making compensation to the covenantee.

(3) Nor is it enough, to show that no damage has been sustained by the delay, & that the premises may be put into as good or better condition than they would have been if the covenant had been punctually performed, or even that, by a mistake of the solr. who prepared the lease, the limitation of the period for performance of the covenant had been introduced, although not warranted by the previous agreement, or so understood at that time by the parties themselves, denied by the answer.

SUB-SECT. 2.—WAIVER.

2479. Nature of defence—Consent to loss of right.]—(1) A proviso relieving a purchaser under a power from inquiring as to the regularity of a sale does not protect a purchaser who knows of an irregularity which cannot have been waived.

A mtge. deed contained a covenant to pay at the expiration of six months, & a power of sale in the usual form, with a proviso that the power should not be executed until the mtgee. had given notice to the mtgor. to pay off the debt, & default should have been made for three months. The deed also contained the usual clause for the protection of purchasers in any sale purporting to be made under the power. The mtgor. subsequently incumbered his equity of redemption. Two months after the date of the mtge., the mtgee. gave notice to mtgor. to pay off the debt, & seven months after the date of mtge. sold the property to deft.:—Held: (2) three months not having elapsed since default in payment of the mtge. debt, the proviso had not been complied with, & the sale was invalid; & as the purchaser must be taken to have known that the proviso had not been complied with, she was not protected by the protection clause; (3) the mtgor. having incumbered his equity of redemption, & therefore, not being in a position to waive the necessity of notice, the purchaser had no right to assume that there had been any such waiver.

(4) Might a bond fide purchaser infer that in fact there had been waiver of such notice? What is waiver? Delay is not waiver. Inaction is not waiver, though it may be evidence of waiver. Waiver is consent to dispense with the notice (BOWEN, L.J.).—SELWYN v. GARFIT (1888), 38 Ch. D. 273; 57 L. J. Ch. 609; 59 L. T. 233; 36 W. R. 513; 4 T. L. R. 385, C. A.

(2) This is a petition for review upwards of 30 years after the decree suggesting error on the record. Error on one point is apparent enough, but in all these questions which turn upon the limitation of time the right is never taken into consideration, for the statute was made to bar right & not give remedy in dubious cases. . . . Nothing can demand the assistance of the ct. but conscience & reasonable diligence. Laches & neglect are discountenanced here & therefore it was necessary to introduce a limitation. . . . 2491. Presumption against claimant.]—On the separation of A. & B., husband & wife, in April, 1797, an annuity was settled by the husband on the wife determinable on payment of £1,000. In Nov., 1797, at which time B. was living in adultery with C., a bond & warrant of attorney was given by the husband to C. to secure £1,400. Judgment was entered up on the bond, & in 1801 proceedings were taken to enforce it, but were stopped by injunction. Afterwards another bond for £537 was given by the husband to C., which was satisfied in 1803. Upon a bill filed in 1833, by B. against A.'s extrix, for payment of the arrears of the annuity, pltf. being unable to prove that any payment had been made on account of the annuity since 1803, & deft. producing the bond for £1,400, the warrant of attorney to enter up judgment thereon & the bond for £537, with a receipt for that amount indorsed:—Held: (1) considering the lapse of time, & the situation of the parties, it might be presumed that the bond for £1,400 was given in discharge of the £1,000, & the subsequent bond for £537 in full discharge of payment of the whole debt; & both these discharges or payments were made with the approbation & for the use of pltf.

(2) In a Ct. of Equity every reasonable intendment is made against stale demands, & therefore, after a long lapse of years, it is not an unreasonable intendment to conclude, that an arrangement by a husband with a party living in adultery with his wife, & which from circumstances appeared to have been in discharge of an undertaking previously given by the husband for the benefit of the wife on separation, was made by her approbation & for her use.—*HAWORTH v. t. Motion to set aside judgment.]—Judgment was signed against deft. for £549.68 & costs, in default of appearance, on July 2, 1892. In 1901 he moved to set it aside on the grounds that he was never served with the writ of summons & that he did not owe any money to pltf. Pltf.'s husband swore that on June 21, 1892, he personally served deft., with whom he was well acquainted, with the writ of summons in the usual way, in the presence & hearing of pltf.'s solicitor, & the affidavit of the solicitor showed that he was present on the occasion in question, when deft., after being served with the writ of summons, admitted that the amount set out in the endorsement was correct & that he had no defence:—Held: deft. not having explained the delay on his part of nearly nine years, nor satisfied the ct. that he had any merits, & the judgment being regular, the application was refused.—FOOKS v. COX, 22 C. L. T. 44.—CAN.

2495. Constructive trust—Subject to contingencies.]—Managing partners of a mining partnership at will gave notice of dissolution to the rest, & intimated their intention after the dissolution, to apply for a new lease for their own exclusive benefit, & did so & obtained a lease, & carried on business with uniform success without any outlay beyond what the produce of the mines was more than sufficient to meet. The excluded partners continually asserted their right, which, however, was always denied by the others, to participate in the profits, but took no active steps to enforce it for nine years:—Held: (1) they were precluded by laches from obtaining any relief either in respect of the profits after the dissolution, or of the other partners having bid at the sales of the partnership effects at the dissolution, notice having at the time been given of their intention to do so.

(2) Semble: the rules as to laches & acquiescence which govern cases of direct trust, & apply to property of an ordinary character, do not apply to constructive trusts affecting property like mines, subject to extraordinary contingencies & capable of being rendered productive only by a large & uncertain outlay.

(3) The continual assertion of a claim, unaccompanied by any way to give effect to it, will not keep alive a right which would otherwise be precluded.

(4) Although it cannot be laid down that in no case can a partner, during the partnership, contract for a new lease, to himself exclusively, of property let to a partnership, it is very difficult (& especially as regards a managing partner) to make out such a case, & the mere intimation to his partners of his intention to apply for such a lease after the dissolution, is not sufficient to exclude their interest, although the partnership is at will.—CLEGG v. EDMONDSON (1857), 8 De G. M. & G. 787; 26 L. J. Ch. 673; 29 L. T. O. S. 131; 3 Jur. N. S. 299; 44 E. R. 593, L. J.

2496. Express trust—Account against trustee.]—

(1) Though the rule as to limitation by time does not apply in the case of express trusts, yet, as to them, in equity the general rule is, that stale demands are not to be encouraged.

(2) In taking accounts against a trustee, when he is to be fixed with a personal liability, his good faith is to be considered, & every fair allowance is to be made in his favour, especially if the demand against him is one which arose many years ago, & the beneficiary was at the time cognisant of all the matters connected with it. A., being greatly in debt, executed a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors, & among the property assigned under the trust deed was a lease for lives renewable for ever, on which the rent reserved was really a high rack-rent; the tenant complained, & the trustee, with the knowledge of A., though without his consent, but with the full assent of A.'s brother, to whom A. had committed the management of his affairs, received from the tenant an abated rent; A. complained of the abatement, but he took no steps to put an end to it:—Held: the estate of the trustee could not, after the expiration of the trust, be called on to make up the deficiency.

(3) While the trust was in existence, A., who had been absent from the country, returned, was informed of all that had occurred, & made an affidavit in a suit then pending, which had been instituted by one of his creditors. In this suit a receiver was appointed over one of the estates included in the trust:—Held: from the date of this appointment the power of the trustee was at an end, & as by the law of Ireland, the receiver's duty related as well to the arrears then due from the tenants of that estate, as to those which would afterwards become due, & consequently, no steps having been taken to enforce payment from the trustee of arrears which, before the appointment of the receiver, he had suffered to accrue, his estate could not, after the lapse of many years, be made liable for those arrears.

(4) Though it is perfectly true that no time runs as between the cestui que trust or beneficiary & the trustee, upon an express trust, so as to bar the remedy of the beneficiary, yet with respect to claims made by him against a trustee, the general rule of equity that encouragement is not to be given to stale demands is equally applicable. . . . Every fair allowance ought to be made in favour of the trustee if it can be shown that the claim which is now sought to be enforced is one which arose many years ago, & one of the nature & particulars of which the beneficiary was at the time when it arose perfectly cognisant (LORD WESTBURY, C.).—MCDONNELL v. WHITE (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 570; 11 E. R. 1454, H. L.

2497. Foreclosure of equitable mortgage—Statute of limitations not applicable.]—(1) Where an action to enforce by foreclosure an equitable mtge. of an advowson in gross was brought 40 years after the date of mtge., no payment having been made on account of principal or interest in the meantime, though the Statutes of Limitation were not applicable, the claim, which would have involved an account of the interest unpaid for the 49 years, was dismissed on the ground that a ct. of equity would always refuse aid to a stale demand of such a kind.

(2) In 1860 an advowson was mortgaged, the legal estate being left outstanding in mtgor.; shortly afterwards mtgor. became bankrupt, & in 1892 deft. purchased all the interest of the official receiver in the bankruptcy in this mtge. No payment was ever made on account of principal or interest, & a claim was now made by the persons was fraudulently induced to execute a quit-claim deed of certain land without consideration. The land was afterwards conveyed to plaintiffs, for value, against whom, after more than fifteen years, deft. brought ejectment, & it was decided that the legal title had not passed by his deed. Plaintiffs, thereupon filed a bill to reform deft.'s deed, or, treating it as a contract only, for a specific performance thereof:—Held: though the laches & acquiescence of deft. might be a reason for refusing him relief if plaintiffs still they were not a ground for granting plaintiffs the relief sought.—LIVINGSTONE v. ACRE, WALLACE v. ACRE (1869), 15 Gr. 610.—CAN.

The claim was not barred by any of the Statutes of Limitation, an advowson not being "land" within the meaning of Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 1:—Held: the claim must be dismissed on the ground of the laches of plffs., & on the ground that this was a stale demand to which a ct. of equity should refuse its aid.—*BROOKS v. (2) Upon a bill filed by a creditor to enforce a judgment of 28 years' standing, plff., in order to bought the same land from B. without notice of A.'s purchase, the land being then registered in B.'s name. In a suit brought in 1859:—Held: A. could not eject C. having forfeited his right by his own laches.—CHIDAMBARA NATAYAN v. ANNAPPA NATAYAN (1862), 1 Mad. 62.—IND.

2504. —[—] Mere lapse of time does not bar in equity any more than at law; it is an ingredient which, with other circumstances, may lead the ct. to draw inferences unfavourable to the claim of a party who has let twenty or nearly twenty years elapse without asserting his right. It may in such a case be supposed, that, if he had proceeded earlier, the facts might have been more clearly shown, but there is nothing here to lead to such a supposition (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).—PENNY v. ALLEN (1857), 7 De G. M. & G. 409; 29 L. T. O. S. 41; 3 Jur. N. S. 273; 5 W. R. 303; 44 E. R. 180, L. C.

2505. — Rescission of transaction with trustee—Delay of twenty years.—(1) A trustee, who buys up at an under price a charge on the trust property, may, if for a long lapse of years the cestuis que trust refuse to adopt the purchase, keep it for himself.

(2) There is no rule of equity which prevents one of several residuary legatees buying the shares of another or purchasing for less than the amount a charge on the share of another.

(3) A suit to set aside a transaction entered into openly twenty years previously cannot be sustained. In 1834 C., one of several cestuis que trust, mortgaged his share for £10,500. In 1842 the trustees bought up the mortgage for £1,200 for the benefit of C.'s widow & family, but they were unable to find the purchase money. Thereupon three other cestuis que trust became the purchasers & six years afterwards they became trustees. By an unexpected sale of the trust property in 1863 the whole mtge. money was paid. Upon a bill filed in 1864 by C.'s widow:—Held: she was entitled to no interest in this beneficial purchase.—BARWELL v. BARWELL (1865), 34 Beav. 371; 55 E. R. 678.

2506. — Enforcement of "executed" interest.—(1) Forfeitures are strictissimi juris, & parties who seek to enforce them must exactly pursue all that is necessary to be done in order to enable them to exercise the power.

(2) Mere laches in asserting a right to an interest "executed" are not sufficient in themselves to disentitle a party to relief from a ct. of equity, but he may by "standing by" waive or abandon his right. In the present case the interest relating to an executed, & not an executory, interest, there were no such laches as to disentitle A. to the relief prayed.

Where a person is obliged to apply for the peculiar relief afforded by a ct. of equity to enforce the performance of an agreement, or to declare a trust, or to obtain any other right of which he is not in possession, & which may be described as an executory interest, it is an invariable principle of the ct. that the party must come promptly—that there must be no unreasonable delay; &

if there is anything that amounts to laches on his part, cts. of equity have always said, "We will refuse you relief." With regard to interests which are executed, the consideration is entirely different. There mere laches will not of itself disentitle the party to relief by a ct. of equity; but a party may, by standing by, as it has been metaphorically called, waive or abandon any right which he may possess, & which, under the circumstances, therefore, a ct. of equity may say he is not entitled to enforce (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).—*CLARKE & CHAPMAN v. 2507. — Where no fraud.—(1) Lapse of time is a bar to all proceedings in equity for the purpose of undoing any transaction which is not tainted by fraud; meaning thereby an act involving grave moral guilt.

(2) An arrangement between the shareholders & directors of a co. admitted to have been originally ultra vires was upheld on the ground that lapse of time prevented the transaction from being impeached although the books of the co. accessible to the shareholders did not show the real nature of the transaction.

(3) In this case the time appears to me to bar any right, which might originally have existed, to set aside the transaction. The winding-up order was made in Apr. 1861, more than twelve years after the transaction, & his exors. By the form of the certificate of grant, the gale was granted to the miner, rendering & paying a tonnage rent for coal gotten, & so working as to get a specified amount every year, with a minimum rent of £200, in case no coal was gotten or the tonnage rent for coal gotten did not reach that amount. The minimum rent being in arrear the gaveler, after a formal demand, took possession of the mine, & gave notice to the galee of his having re-entered. The galee ten months afterwards tendered the rent due & subsequently presented a petition of right to have the forfeiture of the gale set aside on payment of the rent due, with interest, & for an injunction against a regrant to others:—Held: after the lapse of time, the galee must be treated as having acquiesced in the re-entry of the Crown & the petition was dismissed with costs.—Re BRAINE (1874), 1 L. 2512. —[—]—(1) The lease of a mineral property was sold, subject to the sanction of the ct., for £55,000 to a person who was in fact the agent of a syndicate, & the contract was subsequently approved by the judge. The syndicate then formed & registered a new co. for the acquisition of the lease & working of the minerals, & a provisional contract bearing even date with the articles of assn. was executed for the sale of the property to a trustee for the co. for £110,000. The articles named five directors, with power to adopt the contract, & made two directors a quorum at their meetings. Of these five directors two were abroad at the time of the incorporation of the co., & took no part in the proceeding relating to the completion of the contract; one was the agent who purchased the property on behalf of the syndicate; another obtained his share qualification by way of loan from the principal member of the syndicate; the fifth subscribed & paid for his own qualification shares. The three last mentioned directors attended the first meeting & adopted the contract. A prospectus was then issued, naming the agent of the syndicate as one of the directors, & mentioning the provisional contract, which recited the previous contract, but not the price paid by the syndicate. At the first general meeting of the co., held in Feb. 1872, questions were asked by a shareholder with regard to certain rumours relating to the difference between the price at which the property had been purchased by the promoters & that at which it had been resold to the co., but the chairman avowed himself ignorant of the truth of the rumours, but stated his belief that the property was worth the money given by the company. In the following June, at the annual general meeting of the co., the question was again raised, & a committee of investigation was appointed, who presented their report in Aug. After some correspondence, this suit was instituted in the following Dec.:—Held: there was no laches or acquiescence on the part of the co. such as to preclude them from suing for a rescission of the contract.

(2) Ptiffs. in this case are an incorporated co., but I think that in considering the question of laches the ct. cannot divest itself of the knowledge that the corp. is an aggregate of individuals. The knowledge of one shareholder is not the knowledge of the others; but I think great injustice might sometimes be done if it were held that where it is shown that all the shareholders who paid reasonable attention to the affairs of the co. had notice sufficient to make it laches in them not to act promptly, there could not be laches in the co. unless the notice was brought home to the co. in its corporate capacity. But at the same time it should be recollected that shareholders who seek to set aside a contract made by the governing body have practically first to change that governing body, & must have time to do so (LORD PENZANCE).

(3) Delay as it seems to me has two aspects. Lapse of time may so change the condition of the thing sold or bring about such a state of things that justice cannot be done by rescinding the contract, subject to any amount of allowances or compensations. This is one aspect of delay & it is in many cases particularly applicable to property of a mining character. But delay may also imply acquiescence, & in this aspect it equally bars ptff.'s right, for such a contract, as is now under consideration, is only voidable & not void (LORD PENZANCE).

(4) A ct. of equity requires that those who came to it to ask its active interposition to give them relief should use due diligence after there has been such notice or knowledge as to make it inequitable to lie by. Any change which occurs in the position of the parties or the state of the property, after such notice or knowledge, should tell much more against the party in moré, than a similar change before he was in moré should do. . . . I think, from the nature of the inquiry, it must always be a question of more or less depending on the degree of diligence which might reasonably be required, & the degree of change which has occurred, whether the balance of justice or injustice is in favour of granting the remedy or withholding it (LORD BLACKBURN).—*ERLANGER v. ### C. Necessity for Knowledge of Rights.

(a) In General.

2513. Sufficiency of knowledge required.]—

(1) Fraud being established against a party, it is for him, if he alleges laches in the other party, to show when the latter acquired a knowledge of the truth & prove that he knowingly forbore to assert his right.

(2) Now the doctrine of laches in Cts. of Equity is not an arbitrary or a technical doctrine. Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy, either because the party has, by his conduct, done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or where by his conduct & neglect he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted, in either of these cases, lapse of time & delay are most material. But in every case, if an argument against relief, which otherwise would be just, is founded upon mere delay, that delay of course not amounting to a bar by any statute of limitations, the validity of that defence must be tried upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances, always important in such cases, are, the length of the delay & the nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party & cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking the one course or the other, so far as relates to the remedy. . . . In order that the remedy should be lost by laches or delay, it is, if not universally, at all events, ordinarily—& certainly when the delay has been only such as in the present case—necessary that there should be sufficient knowledge of the facts constituting the title to relief (per CUR.).—LINDSAY PETROLEUM Co. v. (2) Trust, upon a resale, as to the price received. Considerable length of time before the bill had no effect, as it did not distinctly appear that the cestui que trust knew that the purchase was made on account of the trustees.

(3) The question as to acquiescence cannot arise until it is previously ascertained that the cestui que trust knew his trustee had become the purchaser; for while the cestui que trust continued ignorant of that fact there was no laches in not quarrelling with the sale upon that special ground. . . . To fix acquiescence upon a party it should unequivocally appear that he knew the fact upon which the supposed acquiescence is founded & to which it refers (GRANT, M.R.).—RANDALL v. ERRINGTON (1805), 10 Ves. 423; 32 E. R. 909.

The ground of the claim was the fraud of deft. in pretending to act as pltf.'s stockbroker while in fact selling to pltf. deft.'s own shares. The transactions took place in & before Aug. 1906. Pltf. did not discover the fraud until July, 1912. The action was commenced in Nov. 1912. Dft. used no means to conceal the cause of action. Pltf., a married woman, & her husband were clients of J. & W., a father & son, who carried on business together in partnership as solrs. In 1859, pltf. became possessed to her separate use of a sum of £3,000, which, in consequence of her husband's pecuniary difficulties, she was advised by the solrs. to invest without his concurrence. On the suggestion of J. & W., she advanced to them £1,300, part of the 3,000, which they required for another client to complete a purchase of an advowson, on the security of a written undertaking signed by both to execute a legal mtge. of the advowson to her when the transaction was completed. Pltf. subsequently handed the remaining £1,700 to W., on the representation by him alone that it would be invested on mtg. of the real estate of another client. In Jan. 1865, J. died, having retired from the business in 1862, & in May, 1865, pltf. was fraudulently induced by

W. to execute a deed constituting him the sole trustee of the £3,000 & empowering him to invest it as he thought proper, without being answerable for any loss. No legal mtge. of the £1,300 was ever effected, & in 1868 it was paid off to W. under the authority of the deed of 1865, & it & the £1,700, which had never been invested, were spent by W. He continued to pay pltf. interest on these funds till Nov. 1871, & died insolvent in Mar. 1872:—Held: in consequence of the regular payment of interest by W., laches was not attributable to pltf. for not enforcing her rights sooner.—PLUMER v. Pltf. did not discover the mistake until the two years limited by Tithe Act, 1836 (c. 71), for the recovery of a tithe rent-charge had expired & defts. had lost their remedy for the arrears against the lands actually chargeable:—

survey, it was impossible then to convey the births. Subsequently, the survey difficulty was removed & his application as to one of the births was accepted in the year 1861, but he having removed to the United States, never received any notice of such acceptance.

In 1881 he first heard of the acceptance, & in 1884 sold all his interest therein for $4,000. B. afterwards became entitled, by subsequent assignment for value, to all M's interest, the assignments being duly filed in the Crown lands department. M. & B.,

2529. Prescription running unknown to party affected.—Certain lands which were subject to a fee farm rent were, in 1812, conveyed upon a sale by the then owner to pltf.'s predecessor in title. From 1812 down to 1872 the rent was paid by the vendor & his successors in title. From 1812 down to 1872 the rent was paid by the vendor & his successors in title, notwithstanding the fact that they had ceased to have any interest in the lands. The persons who, during that period, claimed to be entitled to, & so received the rent, were ignorant of the conveyance of the lands to pltf.'s predecessors in title. In 1872, the successor in title of the vendor refused to continue the payments of rent, & deft., as the owner of the rent, thereupon demanded payment of the rent from pltf., & on her refusal to pay it, distrained upon the land for the arrears. Pltf. thereupon replevied, claiming that deft.'s title to the rent was barred by discontinuance of the receipt of the rent, under Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 28), ss. 2, 3, on the ground that the payments of rent since 1812 not being by the terre-tenant, there had been no receipt of the rent within above Act during such period:—Held: (1) there was no discontinuance of receipt of the rent; first, because the provisions of the statute only apply where there has been an omission by the party entitled to the rent to enforce his remedies for the payment with knowledge that the rent has not been paid, which was not the case with regard to deft. or his predecessors in title; secondly, because under the circumstances it must be presumed that on the conveyance of the lands before mentioned there was some arrangement that the vendor should indemnify the purchaser against the rent, & the payments of rent from 1812 to 1872 were therefore made on behalf of pltf. & her predecessors in title; deft.'s title was therefore not barred.

R. entered into the partnership without examining the books, & continued in it for four years, taking no part in the business & never examining the books. At the end of that time the bank turned out to be insolvent. R. then filed a bill against B. & the exors. of W., asking to have the agreement for partnership rescinded, & to have an indemnity against the debts of the concern:—Held: (1) the delivery of the paper to R. as a true account of the state of the bank was such a misrepresentation as entitled R. to have the contract rescinded; (2) the case as regarded W. was not varied by the facts that W. took no part in the affairs of the bank, & was known by R. not to do so, & did not know the representation to be untrue; (3) R.'s having brought an action against B. & W. for the misrepresentation, & recovered damages against B., did not take away his right against W.'s estate.

2539. — —.]—Whether there have been laches on the part of the person disputing a will is a question of fact. A certain amount of delay on the part of an exor., who is also next of kin, in instituting proceedings to prevent probate, does not necessarily amount to negligence on his part or warrant the ct. in holding, notwithstanding, that he had all along full knowledge of the facts, that it would be inequitable to allow him to proceed to impeach the will, especially if the assets have not been distributed & if his conduct has not led other persons to alter their position to their own detriment.—*WILLIAMS v. 2540. — Loss of evidence.]—A. was the solr. & land agent of B., who was desirous of selling an estate, & in a letter to A. expressed his readiness to sell it for 13,000 guineas. The estate consisted of two portions, & a land-valuer, whose valuation was not shown to have been communicated by A. to B., put upon the two portions separate values which, added together, exceeded the 13,000 guineas. A. sold part of the estate to C. for a sum exceeding the valuer's estimate of that portion, & then purchased the other portion for a sum much less than that stated in the estimate, but which, added to C.'s purchase-money, just made up 13,000 guineas. A. pretended that the latter purchase was made by one of his relatives, & the conveyance from B. was executed to that relative, but immediately afterwards a conveyance was executed from the relative to A., & in that conveyance was a recital that the purchase-money was furnished by A. These facts were not discovered till 37 years afterwards, & then B. filed his bill against the representatives of A., who had died 17 years before, to set aside the latter conveyances, & to have an account:—Held: the circumstances of the transaction were of a fraudulent nature, & therefore furnished an answer to the objection arising upon the length of time during which the transaction had remained unimpeached.

The only doubt which I have had, has been with regard to the lapse of time & acquiescence, & certainly it is of the last importance that there altered by the delay; if that were shown, the ct. has the power of modifying the relief given, so as not to wrong the parties; or it might, in its discretion, refuse to give any should be a limitation to inquiries of this sort but I am obliged to come to the conclusion that the remedy in this case is not barred by lapse of time, & that the parties have never, with a knowledge of the facts, done anything which can be considered as an acquiescence in the matter complained of. I therefore must conclude in the words used by LORD COTTENHAM, C., when Master of the Rolls: "It does indeed become the duty of the ct., when transactions of long standing are brought before it, most anxiously to weigh all the circumstances of the case, & to consider what evidence there may have been, which from lapse of time may be lost. The name & place of business of the Norwegian co. owning the steamer were known to the owners of the British vessel, & for one or more days, on 47 occasions during the following eleven years, the Norwegian steamer put into ports in the United Kingdom. During the same period there were changes in the capital & in the shareholders of the Norwegian co. In 1889 pltf.s., the owners of the British vessel, instituted an action in rem against the Norwegian steamer. The owners of the Norwegian steamer, as defts., pleaded, in bar of the action, that the claim of pltf.s., their rights, if any, & their maritime lien, if acquired, had been lost by laches, & that it would be otherwise inequitable to allow the action to proceed, as there had been changes of interest in the ownership of the steamer, the rights of third parties had intervened, & the greater part of the crew of the steamer were not now available to give evidence:—Held: (1) pltf.s. were entitled to prosecute their claim for damages, for in each case the particular circumstances must be looked at to see whether it would be inequitable to entertain the suit, considering the period of time that had elapsed since the collision, the opportunities of arresting the vessel, the loss of witnesses, the loss of evidence, & the change of property, & in this case, though defts. would be entitled to every presumption which could fairly be made in their favour by reason of the absence of any witness, defts. had failed to show that the merits could not be gone into.—THE KONIG MAGNUS, [1891] P. 223; 65 L. 2545. — Delay by creditor in impeaching composition.]—A composition deed contained a covenant by a debtor to pay his creditors one shilling in the pound & a release by them conditional on his performing his covenant. The debtor was in reality able to pay his creditors seven shillings in the pound. The deed was duly registered under Bkpcy. Act, 1861 (c. 134), s. 192 & Bkpcy. Amendment Act, 1868. The requisite majority in number & value of creditors assented. The one dissentient was a judgment creditor who was prevented by the deed from levying execution. For more than seven months he took no steps but eventually moved to cancel the registration of the deed:—Held: whether the assenting creditors did or did not know that the debtor was able to pay seven shillings in the pound, the deed was fraudulent & could not bind a non-assenting creditor, & nothing having been done or omitted by the non-assenting creditor, by which the debtor or any other person had been or could be prejudiced, mere delay was not laches.—RE'ULLEN, *Ex p. 2547. — Money advanced in reliance on title.]

—D., a creditor who had proved a debt under a bkpt.'s estate, fraudulently assigned the dividends payable on the proof, to three distinct parties; & after having once assigned them, re-assigned the same dividends to a second person, without any reservation as to the first, & so to a third party without any reservation as to the second or first. The assignments were all by deeds under seal. B.'s was the first, & had priority in the order of time of execution. C.'s was prior in date, but not in time of actual execution. C. & W.'s last. B. omitted to give notice until after C. had given notice of his assignment; but at the time of C.'s notice his deed was unstamped, & was antedated. C. & W.'s was with notice of the two previous assignments to B. & C.

The doctrine as to legal priority, unless equitably disturbed, thus explained: "That, where two persons are clothed with a legal right, as regards an estate in the hands of trustees, & one of those parties gives notice before the other, & before such other gave that notice the second party had advanced his money, or done some strong act putting himself in a very different position from what he would have done if he had been cognisant of the title having passed away from the person to whom he had advanced his money, the first party, although by law entitled to priority, would then forfeit it by reason of his laches, in causing the second party to put himself in a position which, but for those laches, he would not have done." This ct., sitting as a Ct. of Equity, will so arrange the distribution of the fund; but, if the laches have not resulted in placing the second party in a different position, the rule in equity as to priority disturbs the legal right, & the laches will not be allowed to be set up, so as to defeat the right of the party having the equitable title, by one who has acquired the legal priority by giving notice. Thus, B.'s assignment, although without notice until after C.'s notice had been given, was entitled to priority, because his laches had not placed C. in a different position; the consideration for the assignment of the latter being a previously existing judgment debt, not forborne to be put in execution by the assignment, but the rights of C. as a judgment creditor thereby expressly saved:—Held: under such a state of circumstances, B.'s deed should be first satisfied. Then C.'s. Lastly C. & W.'s.—Re WYATT & UNDERWOOD, Ex p. BURGESS, CARPENTER & STANDERWICK (1853), 22 L. T. O. S. 24.

2548. — Improvements in property made in reliance on title—Declaration of trust of mining property.]—In Jan. 1820 A. & B., who held more than a third of the shares in a Cornish mine, which was then a losing concern, & the shares were of very little, if any, value, became bkpt. At a meeting of the other shareholders, held in Feb., at which G., though not then a shareholder, was present, it was resolved, in order to prevent the mines from being abandoned & the injury which the neighbourhood would sustain thereby, that a new co. should be formed, consisting of old shareholders & of persons who might be inclined to purchase shares in the mine, & that, for the security of the latter, the mine should be sold under a decree of the Ct. of Stannaries, & the debts of the mine paid with the proceeds. Shortly afterwards G. was appointed assignee of the bkpts.; & then, in order to avoid the responsibility of continuing to hold their shares, he relinquished them under counsel's advice. Afterwards the shares were disposed of amongst old & new adventurers, & G., who had proposed to the trustees for debt., then a minor, to take some of the shares, agreed to take eleven, for himself & friends; & about the same time the trustees authorised him to take four shares for the debt. The mine was afterwards sold, in the Ct. of Stannaries, to G., on behalf of the new co. The purchase-money was paid into ct., & then applied to pay the debts of the mine. Soon afterwards debt. came of age; & his agents paid G. for the four shares at the rate at which he had purchased the eleven, & the four shares were transferred into debt.'s name. The mine continued to be a losing concern to the new co. until after they had prevailed on debt., who was the owner of the freehold, to accept a surrender of the lease under which it had been held, & to grant a new lease at reduced dues, & including new mining ground. Afterwards G. was removed from the assigneeship, & a renewed commission was issued, under which pltf. was chosen assignee of bkpts. Notwithstanding the term granted by the old lease had long expired, & debt. had no knowledge of the bkptcy., & fifteen years had elapsed during which there had been a large expenditure on the mine, the ct. declared debt. to be a trustee of his shares in the mine, including the new ground, & decreed him to account for & pay to pltf. the profits thereof.—*TURNER v. 2560. ——— Claim against residuary legatee.]

—In 1843 G. mortgaged to a firm of solrs. a freehold farm, & also the furniture & farming stock, the mtgor. being permitted to use the furniture & stock but not to sell without consent of the mtgees. In 1859 G. died, having by his will bequeathed the furniture to his unmarried daughters & devised the farm to A., B. & C. upon trust to allow his unmarried daughters to occupy it, they keeping down the mortgage interest, & having bequeathed his residuary personal estate to A., B. & C., whom he appointed exors. upon trust for sale & division among his children. By a codicil testator directed that his unmarried daughters should pay a rent of £600 for the farm, & on their giving it up it should be let. Under the provisions of the will, & with the knowledge of the mtgees., who made no objection, two of testator's four daughters continued to carry on the farm as tenants to the trustees of the will, & for that purpose used the furniture & took to part of the farming stock at a valuation as against their shares of residue. In 1861 the exors., with the knowledge of the mtgees., sold the remainder of testator's residuary personal estate, consisting almost entirely of farming stock, & distributed the proceeds among the residuary legatees pursuant to the trusts of the will, the two daughters who were tenants of the farm applying their shares in carrying it on. In 1863 one of these two daughters married, whereupon her husband took a lease from the trustees, & bought out the interest of the unmarried daughter in the stock & furniture. The interest on the mtge. was, by the direction of the trustees, paid to the mtgees. by the tenants of the farm out of the rent, the mtgees. giving receipts to the tenants only. In 1882, the interest having been unpaid from Aug. 1880, & the security being worthless owing to an existing prior mtge., the legal personal representative of the surviving mtgee. sued G.'s exors. for an alleged devastavit in having distributed G.'s residuary personal estate without providing for the mortgage debt, when it was declared that the exors. were not liable for a devastavit, but judgment was pronounced for a sale of the mortgaged premises, & for administration of G.'s estate. Under that judgment the chief clerk certified that the security was unsaleable, & allowed the payments by the exors. to the residuary legatees, but the order on further consideration was made without prejudice to any proceedings pltf. might take against any other persons than the exors. Thereupon, in 1885, pltf. brought an action against the residuary legatees for payment of the mortgage debt out of G.'s assets received by them. Defts. pleaded the Statutes of Limitation, delay, & acquiescence.—Held: although the legal debt under the mtge. was still subsisting, & was in no way barred by statute, yet pltf.'s claim against the residuary legatees, being in the nature of an equitable demand, was barred by lapse of time & acquiescence.—BLAKE v. 2561. ——— Specialty creditor.]—There is no rule in equity any more than at law, that the mere non-suing by a specialty creditor for any period within the statutory limit of twenty years is such negligence as deprives him of the right of requiring payment of the specialty debt. S. covenanted with B. for immediate payment of a sum of money in exoneration of B., & in substitution for a similar sum which B. was liable to pay within six months of his death. S. died without having paid, or been called on to pay that sum, leaving property amply sufficient to meet it, but her exor., instead of providing out of her estate funds to meet the liability on her covenant, left her estate, consisting entirely of shares in a bank, which afterwards failed, unconverted. The investment in bank shares was authorised by the will of S.:—Held: the exors. of B. were entitled, after a lapse of 18½ years, to enforce that covenant against the estate of S., & the exor. of S., having committed a devastavit in not converting the shares to provide for payment of the debt, was liable to make good the amount for which his testatrix, was so liable under her covenant.—RE BAKER, COLLINS v. the father & mother filed a bill against A. & B., to have the stock replaced; & the children (two in number) were co-pltfs., & being infants, sued by their father, as their next friend; but that suit was soon afterwards compromised, upon B. giving security for the payment of interest for the time past & for the time to come. A. subsequently died, & his personal estate was distributed among his legatees; & two of those legatees then died, having received their legacies; & the residuary personal estate of one of them was paid over to her residuary legatee. These distributions were made in ignorance of any demand arising out of the breach of trust in which A. had concurred. The eldest of the two children attained 21 in 1821, & the other in 1823. In 1833 they filed a bill alone against B. & the personal representative of A. & his surviving legatees, & the personal representatives of his deceased legatees, & the residuary legatee of one of those deceased legatees, & against the father & mother of ptlfs., praying to have the fund replaced:—Held: ptlfs. were entitled to call upon the surviving legatees of A., & the personal representatives & legatees of his deceased legatees to refund; & that, without any previous inquiry, as to whether ptlfs. had known of or acquiesced in the breach of trust, or the compromise of the suit of 1818.

(2) When ptlfs. first became informed either of the breach of trust or of the abandonment of the suit of 1818 does not appear; & whatever may have taken place before the year 1821 is immaterial inasmuch as up to that period they were both under age. There is no allegation with respect to the time at which they became aware of any of the circumstances except that they came of age in the years already mentioned, & that the bill was not filed until the year 1833. It is not contended that the lapse of time will bar their right to the remedy to which according to the practice of this ct. they are entitled. #### 2565. Persons entitled in remainder or contingently—Relief after interest vested in possession.

—A testator directed his estate to be converted & invested, & he gave the same to his wife for life, remainder to his daughter, with remainder to ptlfs. The exors. neglected to convert some leaseholds, & permitted the successive tenants for life to enjoy the same until their expiration. After their deaths ptlfs. filed their bill against the representatives of the exors. for a general account. The exors., who had no personal knowledge of the matter, represented the residue to consist of a sum in the funds; & they, by their answer, amongst other papers, admitted the leases to be in their possession. At the hearing ptlfs. waived the accounts, & took the money in the funds. They afterwards discovered the breach of trust in respect of the leaseholds, & filed a supplemental bill to obtain relief in respect thereof:—Held: they were entitled to relief, but without costs.

Persons entitled in remainder or contingency only are not to be precluded from relief because they do not file their bill until after their interests have become vested in possession (LANGDALE, M.R.).—MEHRTEUS v. ANDREWS (1839), 3 Beav. 72; 49 E. R. 28.

2566. Reversionary interests—Relief after coming into possession.—(1) Length of time, where it does not operate as a statutory or positive bar, operates simply as evidence of assent or acquiescence.

(2) A cestui que trust, whose interest is reversionary, is not bound to assert his title until it comes into possession, but the mere circumstance that he is not bound to assert his title does not bear upon the question of his assent to a breach of trust. A cestui que trust is not less capable of giving such assent when his interest is in reversion than when it is in possession. Qu.: (3) If a cestui que trust knows of a breach of trust, he is bound, although his interest may be reversionary, to take proceedings to have the matter set right, & will be held barred by acquiescence if he does not promptly do so.

(4) In cases where the trust is clear & definite, a breach of trust cannot be held to have been sanctioned or concurred in by the mere knowledge & non-interference on the part of the cestui que trust before his interest has come into possession.

a. Persons entitled in remainder or contingency.—In 1880, a bill was filed to set aside for fraud & limitation under a deed of 1818, by which the reversion in lands was limited to deft. for life. The bill stated that deft. went to America in 1822 to avoid service of the subpoena, & there concealed herself, which prevented the grantor from taking proceedings to set aside the deed; & that he devised the lands to the use of ptlf. for life, "with remainder as therein," & devised the residue of his estate to ptlf. absolutely. On demurrer:—

The mtge. provided that if default should be made in payment of the note when due (which event happened) the £100 should thenceforth bear interest at 5 per cent. per month. B. died in 1872. The bond became payable in Oct. 1873, by the death of his father, & B.'s extrix. thereupon filed her bill to redeem:—Held: B., if not an expectant heir, was a reversioner, & as such entitled to relief against an unconscionable bargain, & that the securities must be delivered up upon payment of the amount advanced, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum.—*BEYNON v. Failure of remainderman to secure trust fund.]—By his will a testator, who died in 1862, left his residuary estate to G. & others upon trust for his daughter A. for life for her separate use, with remainder in the events which happened as she should appoint. G., who survived the other trustees, died in 1879, having by his will appointed L. & S. exors. thereof. L. resided in England & S. in America. Part of testator's estate consisted of American securities, which L. when in America delivered into the custody of S., who regularly paid the income thereof to A., then the wife of J. B. A. In 1883 new trustees of testator's will were appointed in England. Mrs. A. died in 1892, having by her will given her property to her husband. They both recognised S. as the American trustee. S. was then pressed to transfer these securities to the new trustees here, which he refused to do, & it then transpired that he had recently made away with them & was insolvent. In an action by the new trustees & J. B. A. against L. & S. to render L. liable for the loss:—Held: (1) as against the trustees, sect. 8 of Trustee Act, 1888 (c. 59), was a good defence; (2) as to J. B. A., inasmuch as he might at any time since 1883, when the securities were intact, have brought an action in the name of his wife for the purpose of transferring the securities to the new trustees, & neglected to do so, he was guilty of laches, & could not now recover against L.—*Re TAYLOR, ATKINSON v. The son took possession of the estate, & paid off the legacies & charges. 14½ years after the death of the tenant for life, & 17 years after the purchase of the reversion, the assignee of one of the vendors, an object of the power, who had become insolvent, filed his bill to set aside the sale:—Held: the lapse of time was a bar to the relief; the mere circumstance of the poverty of the cestui que trust was not sufficient to excuseth the delay.

At A.'s death, he left the son & four daughters him surviving. The son married, enjoyed the dividends of the residue during life, & died without ever having had a child. During the life of the son, & till the time of filing the bill, which was 24 years after his death, all the members of the family had believed, & had done many acts on the belief, not the result of legal discussion, but a mere family assumption, that the son was not entitled to a share of the residue as one of the next of kin, but that his title to the property expired with his life estate:—Held: this was not such an acquiescence in a family arrangement as prevented the son's personal representatives from enforcing their claim.—BULLOCK v. Pltfs. having made default, deft. cancelled the contract, & being himself pressed for payment of amounts due by him in respect of the same land, shortly afterwards re-sold it, realising $500 less than the amount pltfs. were to pay. With respect to laches, undoubtedly a considerable time has elapsed, upwards of three years; but having regard to the view which the ct. takes of cases of this sort, that is not such a lapse of time as ought to bar pltf. from obtaining relief in this suit. In the first place, this is to be considered, that it is always a painful thing to file a bill of this description. 2580. Acquiescence for seventeen years.]—A. was the administrator of an estate, to one-third of which each of his brothers C & D. was entitled. In 1833 A. wrote to B. & C., offering, in order to prevent the necessity of accounts & the probability of dispute, to pay each £1,000 for his share. B. accepted the offer & C. wrote to say that whatever B. determined "would meet his approbation." A. & B. acted on the contract as complete, & C. never repudiated it or asked for any accounts or explanations. Upon the death of B., seventeen years afterwards C. insisted that there was no contract binding on him & he claimed one-third of the estate:—Held: C. had acquiesced & was bound by the contract.—*COOD v. In the meantime the estate of the mtgor. had been administered by the exors., & the legacies paid & annuity kept down. In 1857 the mtgee.'s representatives instituted a suit for the administration of testator's estate, & payment of the balance of the mtge. debt, if any, which the proceeds of the mortgaged premises might be insufficient to satisfy. The mortgaged premises, having become depreciated, were sold for less than the debt, & the balance was certified to be due from the exors., & was ordered to be paid by them, but they were unable to pay it, whereupon, in 1860, the mtgee.'s representatives filed a bill to have the mtgor's residuary estate applied in payment of his debts, so far as it would extend, & to compel the legatees & annuitant to refund. ## Part XIX.—Ne exeat regno.

SECT. 1.—NATURE OF THE WRIT.

2588. Common law writ.—The writ ne exeat regno ought not to be granted but upon great reason & examination. As merchant strangers may be prohibited from coming into England, by the same reason the king's subjects may be restrained from going out of the kingdom & for this purpose this writ of ne exeat regno was framed which is grounded upon the common law & not given by any particular statute (HOLT, C.J.).—NAILOR'S CASE (1701), as reported in Holt, K. B. 494; 90 E. R. 1172.

2589. High prerogative writ—Extended to civil cases.]—A writ of ne exeat regno was originally confined to state affairs, but is now very properly used in civil cases.

To induce the ct. to continue the writ of ne exeat regno to the hearing of a cause it is necessary for pltf. to show that the debt demanded against deft. is certain (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—ANON. (1748), 1 Atk. 521; 26 E. R. 329, L. C.

2590. ———.—Writ of ne exeat regno, obtained by one French emigrant against another, discharged upon the circumstances appearing upon the affidavits in support of the bill, & upon the answer, which may be read, the application not being in the nature of an affidavit to hold to bail, but to the discretion of the ct. applying a remedy, not in its origin distinctly applicable to private transactions between subject & subject. It is very delicate to apply it as against foreigners; & it would be a necessary term, that it shall be simply a case of equity.—DE CARRIERE v. DE CALONNE (1799), 4 Ves. 577; 31 E. R. 297, L. C.

2591. ———.—(1) To obtain a writ of ne exeat regno, it is sufficient, that the affidavit states, that the debt will be endangered; without alleging, that the purpose of going abroad is to avoid the demand.

(2) This is a high prerogative writ & is applied to cases of private right always with great caution & jealousy (LORD ELDON, C.).—TOMLINSON v. HARRISON (1802), 8 Ves. 32; 32 E. R. 262, L. C. Annotation :—As to (1) Reid. Stewart v. Graham (1815), 19 Ves. 313.

2592. ———.—(1) Writ of ne exeat regno, a high prerogative writ, originally applicable to purposes of State, afterwards extended to private transactions confined to cases of equitable debt.

(2) The affidavit must be as positive as an affidavit to hold to bail information & belief admitted only upon matter of pure account, as between partners & exors.

(3) The application ought to be as prompt as possible.—JACKSON v. PETRIE (1804), 10 Ves. 164; 2 E. R. 807, L. C.

Annotation :—As to (2) Reid. Thompson v. Smith (1865), 34 L. J. Ch. 412.

2593. ———.—(1) Writ of ne exeat regno, granted at the suit of an English subject against a native of Russia, generally resident & carrying on business in partnership at St. Petersburg, & in this country only for a temporary purpose, upon a balance of account in respect of goods consigned to him & his partner. The writ will issue on a balance of account sworn by deponent to be due, to the best of his belief; but, if the mode of putting the account be mentioned, & it appears to comprise unascertained sums, it will not be granted. The ct. will always hear deft. moving to discharge the writ; but it will only inquire, whether there is reasonable ground to suppose that pltf. will succeed in the suit. Exemption from arrest for a debt of the same nature by the laws of Russia is not a sufficient ground for discharging the writ, where one of the parties is an Englishman, & was resident in this country.

Qu. : whether the writ will be granted, where, the debt has been contracted while pltf. & deft. resided in a foreign country, by the laws of which arrest for debt is not permitted.

(2) This writ was originally issued in attempts against the safety of the State, & may be applied, subject to responsibility in those who give the advice, to prevent any subject from quitting the country. How it happened that this great prerogative writ, intended by the laws for great political purposes & the safety of the country, came to be applied between subject & subject, I cannot conjecture. Where cts. on this side of the Hall have held debtors to bail by analogy, though it is a very imperfect one, to what is done on the other side, they have said they could give this equitable bail in equitable cases; but they do not grant it where you can arrest at law, except in this particular case, in which, being matter of account, they have concurrent jurisdiction. Now, I take it, that to obtain this equitable bail, the affidavit must be as precise, though not more so, as in cases of legal bail (LORD ELDON, C.).—FLACK v. HOLM (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 405; 37 E. R. 480, L. C.

SECT. 2.—ISSUE OF THE WRIT.

2595. Before action brought.—A solr.'s bill being taxed & reported overpaid £60, the client on motion & affidavit of his being about to go beyond sea, had a ne exeat regno, though no bill in ct. whereon to ground this writ.—LOYD v. CARDY, (1701), Prec. Ch. 171; 24 E. R. 82.

2602. Writ in order unless discharged.—A writ of ne exeat against deft. was obtained by pltf. immediately after the commencement of an action. Deft. was arrested, but was discharged upon payment to the sheriff of the sum for which the writ was marked. By his statement of defence deft. alleged that the writ had been improperly obtained, & claimed damages for his arrest, & at the trial he insisted upon this claim:—Held: as deft. had not moved to discharge the writ, it must be taken to have been properly issued, & consequently, that deft. was not entitled to any damages.—LEES v. PATTERSON (1878), 7 Ch. D. 866; 47 L. J. Ch. 616; 38 L. T. 451; 26 W. R. 399.

PART XIX. SECT. 1.

2594 i. Equitable bail.—Notwithstanding the exor. had refused to produce before the master any books of account of an estate he had managed for years, the unsatisfactory character of his accounting, his absence from the colony, & his producing mtgs. as assets of the estate made to himself, the ct. refused to grant an injunction to restrain the Receiver General from paying the exor. his pension or to restrain the exor. from selling his property, on the ground that bail had been obtained from him or the process of ne exeat regno.—Re PARKER'S ESTATE (1864), 5 Nfld. WATTS (1749), 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 257; 47 E. R. 1159, L. C.

2607. —.]—Writ of ne exeat regno for arrears of alimony & costs. Affidavit for a writ of ne exeat regno must state an intention to go abroad; that deft. will hide himself is not sufficient. It must be positive, that he is going abroad; or to some declaration, that he is, by himself, not a third person.—OLDHAM v. OLDHAM (1802), 7 Ves. 410; 32 E. R. 166, L. C.

2609. — Whether belief of intention sufficient.—The writ of ne exeat regno issued properly the subject being matter of account. A general affidavit of belief of deft.'s intention to quit the kingdom is sufficient without the circumstances, upon which that belief is founded. Upon an application for the writ of ne exeat regno no subpoena is served; but upon personal service of the writ the party is bound to appear & to put in his answer; & then he may apply to supersede the writ; but not upon his affidavit.—RUSSELL v. O'HANLON (1840), 2 I. Eq. R. 463.—IR.

h. Suppression of material facts.—If there has been a suppression of facts which were in the knowledge of the party when he made the affidavit, the ct. will not listen to him saying the facts were not material, unless he can show that they were utterly immaterial. The materiality ought to be for the decision of the ct.—RODOCANACHI v. SODERHOLM (1853), 3 I. C. L. R. 531, 537.—IR.

PART XIX. SECT. 3.

2603 i. Must be precise.—An affidavit, from which the ct. can, without difficulty, ascertain the exact sum due, sets forth the amount of the debt with certainty sufficient to ground a writ of ne exeat.—WALLER v. FOWLER (1837), 34 L. J. Ch. 274.—IR.

(2) The affidavit of a debt on which an application for a ne exeat regno is ground must be distinct & positive, & the way in which the amount is ascertained need not be stated; but if deponent states the mode in which he makes out the debt, & that is not positive, the ct. will not grant the writ.—WHITEHEAD v. BENNETT (1846), 7 L. T. O. S. 313, L. C.

2627. ———.]—Debt governed by foreign law.]—A., a Portuguese subject, carrying on business in this country, had certain mercantile transactions with his brother B. also a Portuguese subject, who carried on business at Lisbon, these transactions including a partnership in one business at Lisbon & an agency by B. on his brother's account, in another business at the same place. The partnership was afterwards dissolved, & B. being on a temporary visit to this country, A. filed a bill for accounts & for a writ of ne exeat regno, & the writ was issued. It not appearing, with sufficient clearness, that there was a debt, & not being stated by A. that the debt would be endangered by the proposed departure of B. the writ was discharged.

The writ has been obtained upon a debt, or an alleged debt, which is the result of transactions merely & entirely Portuguese, locally Portuguese, & governed by the law of Portugal. The question of "debt" or "no debt" with all the considerations that lead to that conclusion must be taken to be governed by the law of Portugal, & by that law alone. There is not sufficient clearness of proof of a debt between these foreigners, contracted in a foreign country, under foreign law, as to justify the ct. in continuing the present arrest (KNIGHT-BRUCE, V.-C.).—*VANZELLER v. See Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 6; R. S. C., Ord. 69.

PART XIX. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.

J. Principles under which writs granted in England not applicable in India.]—There is no authority for saying that the principle applied in England to the granting of writs ne exeat regno should be applied in this country; the ct. can only look to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure.—PROBODER CHUNDER MULLICK v. DOWEY (1887), 1 L. R. 14 Cal. 695.—IND.

k. To prevent evasion of service of process to pay costs.]—A writ of ne exeat regno granted, on the application of a deft. against a pltf. whose bill was dismissed with costs, when from the declarations of pltf., it was apprehended, that he would leave the country, before the service of the process to pay costs could be made effectual.—STEWART v. STEWART (1808), 1 Ball & B. 73.—IR.

l. When recovery of debt endangered.]—A writ of ne exeat regno was granted against deft., on facts alone, which evidenced an intention 2643. Restricted to case within Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 6.]—The mtgee. of a ship, which had foundered, brought an action against the mtgor. to recover the mtge. debt, & applied for a writ of ne exeat regno against deft. who was about to leave England, on the ground that he would be "materially prejudiced in the prosecution of his action" unless he could obtain discovery from deft. of the insurances on the ship, which were the only security to which he could look for the repayment of his money:—Held: (1) the application for the writ ne exeat being made in respect of a legal debt was wrong; (2) the fact of deft. being about to leave England & pltf. wanted discovery from him, did not "materially prejudice pltf. in the prosecution of his action" so as to entitle him to an order of arrest under the above sect.

Semble: since Jud. Acts, 1873 & 1875, the practice at common law & in equity in respect of the arrest of a debtor on mesne process is assimilated, & a writ of ne exeat in respect of an equitable debt will not be granted unless appt. brings his case within the terms of the above sect.

Under the present practice the writ of ne exeat regno is not to be issued except in cases which come within the above sect. (JESSEL, M.R.).—DROVER v. BEYER (1879), 13 Ch. D. 242; 49 L. J. Ch. 37; 41 L. T. 393; 28 W. R. 110, C. A.

Annotation:—As to (2) Follid. Hands v. Hands (1881), 43 L. T. 750.

2644. — — — — —.]—A writ of ne exeat regno can be granted only in these cases which fall within the above sect.—HANDS v. HANDS (1881), 43 L. T. 750

2645. — — — — —.]—By an order on further consideration, in an action to administer the trusts of a settlement, a trustee was ordered to pay a sum certain within seven days after service of the order. Pltf. was unable to effect service of the order, & deposed that he believed the debtor intended to leave England:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to a writ of ne exeat regno because no default had been made by the trustee within the meaning of sect. 4 of the above Act, & the case was not within the above sect.; & under the practice of the Ct. of Ch. a writ of ne exeat regno could only be issued in respect of a debt actually due & payable.

The Ct. of Ch. in granting this writ, was merely proceeding by analogy to what was the process at common law. At common law mesne process was not applied in the case of merely equitable debts. The Ct. of Ch. used this writ in aid of its own jurisdiction where the debt was equitable, just as if the debt had been legal & the action in a common law ct. In this case there could have been no arrest at common law, if the debt had been the subject of an action there, &, by analogy, we ought not to grant a writ of ne exeat regno (COTTON, L.J.).—COLVERSON v. BLOOMFIELD (1885), 20 Ch. D. 341; 54 L. J. Ch. 817; 52 L. T. 478; 33 W. R. 889, C. A.

in him to leave the kingdom, & thereby endanger the recovery of pltf.'s claim under a decree. It is not necessary that the going abroad should be with intent to avoid process, if the effect will be to endanger the recovery of the debt.—M'GAURAN v. FURNELL (1887), 8 Au. & So. 283.—IR.

m. Effect of Judicature Act, 1908.]—Judicature Act, 1908, s. 55 was not intended to give any right to a pltf. to arrest a deft. merely because the absence of deft. would render it difficult or impossible for pltf. to obtain the

For non-payment of costs.]—A ne exeat does not lie in respect of costs taxed in a chancery suit.

The writ of ne exeat is granted in support of a bill filed for an equitable demand, as bail is required at law in support of an action, & the writ of ne exeat has never been granted to assist the process of contempt by which the payment of costs is enforced (LEACH, V.-C.).—GOODMAN v. SAYERS (1821), 5 Madd. 471; 56 E. R. 975.

2647. Circumstances must justify issue of writ of attachment.]—The circumstances under which the ct. will allow a writ ne exeat regno to issue must be such as would justify the issue of a writ of attachment, & in addition the evidence as to the intention of deft. to leave the country must be direct & unequivocal.—Re UNDERWOOD, Re BOWLES, U. v. W. (1903), 51 W. R. 335; 47 Sol. Jo. 256, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 2.—DEBT MUST BE LIQUIDATED, DUE AND PAYABLE.

2649. Debt must be due & payable.]—A writ of ne exeat regno refused upon an undertaking for an indemnity. To obtain it there must be an equitable demand in the nature of a debt actually due.—COCK v. RAVIE (1801), 6 Ves. 283; 31 E. R. 1053, L. C.

2650. —.]—An injunction to restrain an extent having been granted by the Vice-Chancellor upon terms of paying the money in question into a banking house within a month, the Lord Chancellor, on the motion of deft., & evidence of threats of pltf. to leave the kingdom, refused a writ of ne exeat regno, but ordered that the injunction should be dissolved, unless the money was paid within three days; & intimated a doubt of the jurisdiction of the ct. to enjoin against an extent.

The writ of ne exeat regno can be issued only on an equitable debt, with the single exception, I think, of a balance of account, on which an action may be maintained; & it can be issued only on an equitable debt then due & payable. The ct. ought to feel no inclination to extend the appln. of the high prerogative writ of ne exeat regno. I think that it has been granted on grounds which ought not to be enlarged by subsequent decisions. If men will not take from their debtors security ruits of his judgment if the deft. left the Dominion, but is limited to cases where the evidence of a deft. is materially necessary for the pltf. to prove his case.—LAWSON, SWAIN & WALKER, LTD. v. MONTFIORE, [1919] N. Z. L. R. 666.—N. Z.

2688 l. Denial of intention to leave kingdom.—A writ of ne exeat was granted against deft. upon facts which merely evidenced an intention in him to leave the kingdom, & thereby enlarged the recovery of pltf.'s claim under a decree; & although deft. denied by affidavit that he had any such intention, yet the ct. refused to discharge him until he would give security for the amount of the writ. It is not necessary that the going abroad should be with intent to avoid process, if the effect will be to endanger the recovery of the debt; pltf. omitting to state that an appeal was pending, is not such a suppression of facts from the ct. as to form a ground for discharging deft.—M'GAURAN v. ### PART XX. SECT. 1.

2703 1. Imminent injury.]—There are at least two necessary ingredients for

2704. ———.]—In order to maintain a quia timet action to restrain an apprehended injury pltf. must prove imminent danger of a substantial kind, or that the apprehended injury, if it does come, will be irreparable. Pltf. was a manufacturer of paper, his mills being situate on the bank of a river, the water of which he used to a large extent in his process of manufacture for which it was essential that the water should be very pure. Defts., who were alkali manufacturers, were depositing on a piece of land close to the river, & about one mile & a half higher up than pltf.'s mills, a large heap of refuse from their works. It was proved that in the course of a few years a liquid of a very noxious character would flow from the heap, & would continue flowing for forty years or more, & that if this liquid should find its way into the river to any appreciable extent the water would be rendered unfit for pltf.'s manufacture, & his trade would be ruined. Pltf. did not allege that he had as yet sustained any actual injury. Defts. said that they intended to use all proper precautions to prevent the noxious liquid from getting into the river:—Held: it being quite possible by the use of due care to prevent the liquid from flowing into the river, & it being also possible that, before it began to flow from the heap, some method of rendering it innocuous might have been discovered, the action could not be maintained, & must be dismissed with costs, but the dismissal was expressly declared to be without prejudice to the right of pltf. to bring another action hereafter in case of actual injury or imminent danger.—*FLETCHER v. 2713. —[Equity has always taken a wider & more liberal view of these rights of indemnity than the old common law did. It is settled at common law that given a contract of indemnity no action could be maintained until actual loss had been incurred. The common law view was first pay & then come to the ct. under your agreement to indemnify. In equity that was not the view taken. Equity has always recognised the existence of a larger & wider right in the person entitled to indemnity. He was entitled, in a ct. of equity, if he was a surety whose liability to pay had become absolute, to maintain an action against the principal debtor, & to obtain an order that he should pay off the creditor & relieve the surety. 2719. —[The jurisdiction of this ct. is only an expansion of the common law jurisdiction, which in ancient times was exercised upon preventive writs. As at law two things, title & danger to property, were requisite for the issuing of those writs, so here two things are requisite for the support of a quia timet bill. First, there must be a title in possession, or expectancy, in pltf. It signifies not, whether the latter be vested or contingent. It signifies not whether the title be legal or equitable. The ct., indeed, will not declare pltf.'s title, but it will look at the will or other instrument under which he claims. The title in pltf. is not alone sufficient. There must, secondly, be danger to the property. If there be such danger the ct. will interfere, & will take it into its own possession, or will appoint a receiver, or will grant an injunction, according to the nature of the case, & so protect & preserve the property for such person as may become the owner of it, although possibly pltf. may not be that person. Events may displace his title (SIR JOHN LEACH, V.-C.).—FISHER v. HUGHES (1820), 1 Coop. temp. Cott. 329; 47 E. R. 879.

a quia timet action. There must, if no actual damage is proved, be proof of imminent danger & there must also be proof that the apprehended damage will, if it comes, be very substantial.—GANGABAI v. PURSHOTAM (1907), 1 L. R. 32 Bom. 146.—IND.

2720. —[It is not the practice of Cts. of Equity to entertain suits on behalf of parties, who have only the probability of a future title upon events which may never happen.
